British Billions May Force U. S. Into Naval Race

America's Fleet to Be 'Second to None,' Leahy Says.

England Is Ahead In Capital Ships

By Sidney Olson.

The United States may be forced into the gigantic international armament race by the British $7,500,000,000 five-year defense program, Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, said yesterday.

The 51-year-old admiral insisted that the traditional American principle of "a Navy second to none in the world" will be maintained.

The British announced in a White Paper Tuesday that country is embarking on the greatest and costliest program of naval construction ever undertaken in peace time, contemplating the building this year of three new $40,000,000 battleships, seven new cruisers and two aircraft carriers, together with personnel increases and extensions of docks and storage facilties.

New U. S. Program Seen.

While Admiral Leahy said no new action is contemplated by the department until there is more definite information, it was understood laying of three battleship keels by Great Britain this year will be followed by immediate consideration of further naval building in this country.

The United States Navy already has asked for private bids on one of two $50,000,000 battleships whose keels are to be laid here in midsummer. These two warships, of 16-inch guns, 35,000 tons each, with gearing turbines and high-pressure boilers to maintain a 30-knot speed, will be partial replacement of seven American battleships which will be overage by 1938.

The two new American ships will not be completed until 1941 at present estimates. The British already have laid keels for two battleships, and construction of three more, scheduled to begin April 1, would give the British navy 17 underage battleships. The United States, with but eight underage and two not yet begun, will be lagging considerably unless huge new appropriations for construction are authorized shortly, it was observed.

Eyes Turned to Japan.

The belief grew here yesterday, however, that the real American concern, at least in the Navy Department, is actually over Japanese shipbuilding plans. The American Navy has been kept, throughout duration of the various naval treaties, at practical parity with the British. Now efforts will be concentrated on maintaining our Navy on a strict 5-to-3 ratio with Japan, it was indicated.

The American fleet has remained in Pacific waters for four years, with the usual maneuvers scheduled up and down the West Coast, in rings around Hawaii, and in dashes to Alaska. With but a few small boats in the Atlantic, American maneuvers have been confined to mass demonstrations in waters close to the Far East. This year's maneuvers, lasting from April 16 to June 1, will consist largely of a "defense" of Hawaii.

Admiral Leahy said United States Navy Yards could build "more than one additional ship" this year, indicating construction conceivably could begin on a third battleship in 1937.

Race Already Begun.

With the lid off naval building, as all naval treaties are now dead, the race for sea supremacy already has begun in earnest. Great Britain now has 384 warships of all kinds, 307 of which are underage, is building or has funds for 78 more vessels, and now will build 12 more.

The United States has 405 warships, 307 of which are underage, and is building 95 more, all of which are within the old Washington and London naval treaties.

Japan has 233 warships, 200 of which are underage, is building 31 ships, all of which will be completed by next year, and contemplates a large number of new warships under the latest budget, of which roughly 50 per cent will go for the Army and Navy. At least two super-dreadnoughts probably larger than the 35,000-ton battleship of the British, French and American fleets, are to be announced.

Construction Delayed!

The United States naval building program is now involved in construction difficulties, encountered through the Walsh-Healey act, which provides that industries bidding on Government contracts comply with certain minimum-wage and maximum-hour regulations. Leahy's remark yesterday that keels will be laid "in July," where June has been specified heretofore may have been indicative of further expected delay in securing steel.

Asked about rumors of a British Pacific fleet, Admiral Leahy was noncommittal. High department officials, however, have expressed privately the view that British vessels in Far East waters would be far from unwelcome from the American viewpoint.

Commons Seen Backing Huge Arms Program

Chamberlain Asserts Plan Will Aid Peace; Passage Believed Certain.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 17.—Neville Chamberlin, chancellor of the exchequer, appealed to Commons today to approve Great Britain's $7,500,000,000 defense program as a bulwark for world peace.

Chamberlain, opening a two-day parlimentary debate on the formidable 5-year armaments program entailing unprecedented peacetime expenditures, was believed to be virtually assured of a favorable vote.

Opposition spokesmen, authoritative sources predicted, would restrict their objections to mere formalities because of near-unanimity on the necessity of rebuilding the empire's defenses quickly to avert potential menaces to European peace.

Without attacking Chamberlain's detailed argument, Frederick William Pethick-Lawrence, Scottish Laborite, protested the government had refused to give Commons a report on the state of international affairs and called its White Paper, in which the defense proposals were announced, a "tragic farce."

Britain's average citizen will be hard hit in any event by the $7,500,000,000 armaments bill. Each taxpayer, financial experts predicted, may have to pay as much as 20 cents additional for each $5 of income during the next five years. Already about $1.35 in each $5 goes to the income tax collector.

Catholic U. Rector Talks With Il Duce

Rome, Feb. 17 (AP).—Premier Mussolini and Mgr. Joseph Corrigan, rector of the Catholic University in Washington, D. C., talked social security today.

Mgr. Corrigan outlined his proposal to establish a school of social security at the American university in accordance with the plan he had suggested last week to Pope Pius.

Il Duce explained Italian social legislation to the American prelate.

Mgr. Corrigan arranged to confer later with Father Agostino Gemelli, rector of the Catholic University at Milan. They will discuss the Milan plan for a social service school and the American will visit the university later.

Soldiers Put Down Honduran Revolt

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Feb. 17 (AP).—Honduran government soldiers, combed the region around "Monkey Lagoon" on the Atlantic coast tonight in search of the veteran rebel, Gen. Justo Umana, while an official announcement said a revolutionary movement was "completely under control."

Umana, a government statement said, landed between Tela and Ceiba with 11 other men from Belize, British Honduras, coincident with what authorities said was an unsucessful attack by an insurgent force on the loyal garrison at Progreso, some miles inland.

Tangle Halts Repealer Bill On Red Rider

By James D. Secrest.

Legislative efforts to repeal the "red rider" became embroiled in a parliamentary tangle late yesterday as a member of the House kept the twice-amended Kennedy bill from going to conference.

Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, raised the unusual objection to a unanimous consent request made by Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District committee, after the Senate had rejected the "pink rider" and reinserted the original repeal provision to the House bill.

The Senate struck out the McCormack amendment and substituted the language of the Wheeler bill providing for outright repeal at the end of a free-for-all debate participated in by Senate leaders.

Senator Glass, peppery Virginian, condemned the rider on the one hand, together with the former Comptroller General's requirement for monthly oaths by teachers, but on the other hand expressed fear that its repeal would encourage teachers to advocate communism.

Called "Crackpots."

Majority Leader Robinson stated that if Washington teachers are to be so restricted that a similar taboo should be imposed on members of Congress and officials of the Government.

Persons who asked Congress to enact the law were labeled "crackpots" by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, author of the repeal measure.

Taber's action in the House placed the House bill in the peculiar position of being amended by the Senate, rejected in its amended form by the House, and yet withheld from conferences.

Unless he withdraws his objection today, only two courses will be open to Mrs. Norton. She will either have to ask for a special rule to be able to send the bill to conference, or else she will have to try to call up the original Wheeler bill, which passed the Senate and is now before the House.

Mrs. Norton at first asked unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendment, but she withdrew that request after Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, complained that only a few members were present and stated he would object.

Taber Asks Question.

She then asked unanimous consent that the bill go to conference. McCormack again arose and stated he would not object, but he warned Mrs. Norton that the House would expect the conferees to fight for his amendment.

Taber followed by reading a local newspaper story in which Mrs. Norton was quoted as saying that the House conferees would agree to the Senate demand for outright repeal. He asked her if the story was correct. When she demurred, he asked whether that was her view.

Mickey Cochrane Catches Questions Of Stock Inquiry

Mickey Cochrane's black and white 4-inch checker tie caused more excitement than did the testimony of the catcher-manager of the Detroit Tigers at hearings for the W. E. Hutton Co., brokers, at the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday.

Mickey admitted he didn't know much about stock or stock manipulation on the witness stand. He said in response to a question of whether he hadn't been in Wyoming when a customers-man, Jerry McCarthy, bought stock for him without his knowledge:

"I travel around so much I don't know where I am half the time."

Cochrane, one of many witnesses summoned from Detroit to testify against the Hutton Co., which is charged with manipulating stock of the Atlas Tack Corporation, said he "just followed the advice of McCarthy." Jacob Gruber represented the Government.

Roosevelt Appoints McNutt Commissioner to Philippines

By William V. Nessly.

Paul V. McNutt, lawyer, soldier, former Governor of Indiana and frequently mentioned in connection with the 1940 Presidential race, yesterday was nominated by President Roosevelt to the $18,000 post of High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands. Quick confirmation by the Senate was forecast.

McNutt, in his new capacity, will confer here during the next 30 days on the new problems of relationship between this country and the Philippines, due to the granting of independence by the United States, and will participate next week in conferences with a mission from the Islands, headed by President Manuel Quezon. President Roosevelt asked him to attend the conferences with Quezon's group, designed to reach an agreement on trade relations.

The Indianan, however, has not been taken out of the 1940 speculation by yesterday's appointment. That he does not intend to be submerged in the distant Manila post,

By Gerald G. Gross.

About 4 o'clock this afternoon the mortal remains of James Clinton Stuart will be laid to rest in Fort Lincoln Cemetery, and the last curtain will have fallen on another personality who was feted in his ascendancy, forgotten in his obscurity.

Playwright for the great Modjeska, bon vivant of two continents at the turn of the century, grandson of De Witt Clinton, close friend of the most eminent Shakespeareans since Booth and a veritable Broadway landmark during the Mauve Decade, Mr. Stuart died Tuesday in his third floor front hallroom at 823 Nineteenth street northwest.

Death found him alone, save for the photographic likenesses of Mme. Modjeska, Forbes-Robertson and other famous players of his day, which decorated the room's scarred walls.

Mr. Stuart probably would have wanted it just that way for, although the octogenarian bachelor had lived here more than 15 years, his existence was sustained by memories. A trunk filled with mementoes—finished and unfinished manuscripts, letters, programs, pictures and clippings—was his spiritual bread and butter.

Numbers King to Surrender For Arrest Today After Raid

Emmett Warring to Face Commissioner Turnage, Attorney Agrees in Verbal Clash With Police; Relief Checks Among Gambling Receipts.

Emmett Robert Warring, 32, alleged kingpin of Washington's $1,000,000 "numbers" ring, will be brought before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage this morning so that he may be arrested.

Warring, brother of the notorious "Rags" Warring, will be surrendered by his attorney, Harry Whelan. Detective Roy E. Blick, of the third precinct, will be in the Commissioner's office when Emmett arrives to arrest him on a charge of operating a lottery.

Whelan agreed to surrender Warring after a verbal battle in Turnage's office yesterday during a hearing at which appeared three other members of the Warring gang. The lawyer accused Blick of using a warrant for Emmett's arrest as a subterfuge to enter numerous gang hideouts in the Georgetown section.

Relief Checks Found.

The discovery of several Board of Public Welfare Relief checks among the receipts prompted an investigation by Welfare Director Elwood Street.

Street said the checks, drawn on the board's public assistance division at 2529 Pennsylvania avenue, were issued to unemployable persons receiving direct relief.

Before the owners, however, are suspected of gambling activities, Street said, careful inquiry will be made to determine how the checks happened to be a part of the "numbers racket" receipts.

"We aren't making snap judgments," he said. "These checks might have been there through no fault of the owners. It is possible they were cashed by other parties and reached the gambling establishment without the owners' knowledge."

Three Seized in Raid.

The three alleged members of the gang were seized Tuesday evening when Blick and Capt. Arthur Miller, of the third precinct, raided the Warring counting house, 2423 Pennsylvania avenue. They were identified as Ellis L. (Sugar Pops) Solet, 30, of the Pennsylvania avenue address; Edward J. Juliano, 31, of the 4400 block of New Hampshire avenue northwest, and Edward Oliver, 27, of the 1400 block of Fairmont street northwest.

Each of the men was arraigned before Turnage yesterday and pleaded not guilty to charges of operating a lottery. They were bound over to the grand jury under $2,000 bond each.

Eight hours after the raid at the Warring headquarters a taxicab was found in the Potomac River near the Titanic Memorial. Police investigation disclosed the cab is owned by C. A. Kensinger, who lives on the second floor of the Pennsylvania avenue house directly under the gang rendezvous.

Kensinger asked Capt. Miller for the protection of a policeman after his automobile was found.

"I'm certain those gamblers must think I turned them in," he said, "but I didn't even know what was going on up there."

Maurice Sweeney, 3232 Thirteenth street northwest, self-styled "numbers" writer who police said is a brother of John Sweeney, Warring gangster who is now in Lorton Reformatory, was arrested and

United Church, World Sought By Rockefeller

3,000,000 Hear Radio Address Launching Methodist Drive.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17. — John D. Rockefeller, jr., joined prominent churchmen tonight in a broadcast appeal for "a united Christian world" instead of a divided church which he said "still clings to its denominationalism, in which a drifting, disillusionized, discouraged world sees confusion rather than hope."

Others speakers, urging a united Christian front against communism and fascism, were heard by an estimated 3,000,000 attending dinners in more than 20,000 American churches celebrating the successful launching of the million-unit fellowship movement by the Methodist Episcopal Church, an organization enrolling 1,000,000 members pledged to support the world-wide evangelistic drive of the church.

Cites "Rising Materialism."

"Only a united Christian world can stem the rising tide of materialism, of selfishness, of shaken traditions, of crumbling moral standards and point the way out," Rockefeller said.

"How such a union could be brought about has been suggested by Dr. Stanley Jones. He proposed one church, to be called the Church of Christ, or it might well be called the Church of the Living God, with all sectarian churches as branches. Thus, individual and nonessential differences would be preserved while the fundamentals of religion would all be united."

Jones' Last Appearance.

The program represented the final appearance of Dr. E. Stanley Jones, missionary to India, as head of the National Preaching Mission. Dr. Jones, called from his post in India to head the mission, directed its interdenominational work in 26 major cities.

He was introduced in his final address by Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre, speaking from Washington.

Dr. Jones urged his auditors to place Christianity in control of social and economic life and to defeat Fascist and Communist bids for domination. He added:

"Our denominationalism simply cannot do the task. The next step within Christendom is for the churches to get together."

D. C. Churches Hold Suppers.

Fellowship suppers, where Washington's members of the Methodist Episcopal Church listened to the addresses of John D. Rockefeller, jr., and Dr. E. Stanley Jones, appealing for church unity throughout the Nation, were held by most of the leading congregations of the Capital last night.

It was estimated that more than 4,000 men, women and young people of the denomination assembled to listen in their various churches. Additional hundreds tuned in their radios at home and heard the appeals.

Among some of the most prominent churches at which the fellowship suppers were held were the Petworth, Woodside, Dumbarton Avenue, Trinity, Wilson Memorial and Eldbrook churches.

There are 29 Methodist Episcopal churches in Washington and 86 in the Washington district.

10 Are Killed As Scaffold On Span Falls

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Feb. 17.—At least 10 workmen plunged more than 200 feet to their death from the Golden Gate Bridge today in the collapse of a scaffolding previously declared unsafe by an inspector for the State Industrial Accident Commission.

Frank McDonald, member of the accident commission, said A. F. Mailloux, safety inspector employed by the commission, protested Monday the scaffolding was not safe. The scaffolding was reinforced, Mailloux examined it again and insisted that in his opinion it still was unsafe, McDonald said.

As a result, the commissioner added, the commission's chief inspector, L. K. Reinhardt, and bridge officials were en route to view the equipment when it collapsed.

Several of the victims perished in the meshes of a costly safety net of rope, strung underneath the entire length of the 4,100-foot suspension span. The weight of the falling debris tore out the net, plunging it into the turgid waters of the harbor entrance.

With a prolonged roar, tons of metal and wood being used as paving framework broke loose from a deck of the gigantic $35,000,000 bridge and hurtled at least 12 men to the sea below.

The plummeting tangle of men and materials hit the safety net stretching for more than a mile along the under side of the bridge deck, broke the life web and peeled it off so that it fell into the water like a monster strip of fabric in the unrolling process.

Men Dash to Safety.

Nearby fishing boats and fast-moving Coast Guardsmen sped to the scene and immediately recovered one body and two living men.

Nine other workers, apparently tangled in the wreckage, were given up for dead.

A section of the mass broke loose and drifted toward the open sea with rescue boats in pursuit. The boats overtook it before it reached the heads of the Golden Gate and began searching for bodies.

The spectacular crash was the first major accident on the bridge, which spans the Golden Gate from San Francisco to the scenic and agricultural north coast.

Bridge officials said the failure of a wheel on a trolley-carrier system acted with a trigger-like effect to start the ripping away of the framework.

Men yelled and scrambled toward safety spots as the trolley tore loose, carrying the framework with it. Some of them jumped into the net. But the falling debris came after them, ripped away a 2,100-foot section of the web and swung them diagonally downward 200 feet to the ocean surface.

"I saw the timbers and scaffolding fall," said Albert Ted, a painter who was working a short distance away.

"One man fell and swung onto a beam bracket. He was a red-haired man and still had his pipe in his mouth.

"I scrambled across the steel and

Sandstorm Forces Lindberghs Down In Syrian Desert

By the Associated Press.

Jerusalem, Feb. 17.—A stinging sandstorm forced the flying Lindberghs—Charles and Anne—to an emergency landing today at a Syrian desert oasis, tardy but safe on their aerial jaunt to the Near East.

Reports from Bagdad, their destination, told increasingly anxious watchers at many Asia Minor airports that the famous Americans had landed at Rutbah Wells, on the Damascus-Bagdad motor route.

Airport officials at Bagdad said the Lindberghs had tried to fly on from Rutbah after crossing over that place, but were driven back by the treacherous sand. At one point the visibility was reduced to 200 yards.

Wallace, A.F.L. Back Change in Supreme Court

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE SEEKING SUPPORT OF FARMERS

Wallace Plea.

By Russell Smith.

The Administration made its first bid for farmer support of the President's court reorganization program yesterday when Secretary of Agriculture Wallace warned it is doubtful if the Supreme Court will uphold the agricultural remedies requested by farm organizations.

In making this bid, Wallace voiced for the first time within the Administration the view that the reconstituted Supreme Court called for in the President's program will include "a larger percentage of justices who view the Constitution as an instrument for serving the general welfare and not for blocking it."

This statement, elicited after detailed questioning of the Secretary at a press conference, is the first open admission in a responsible quarter that the Administration hopes to appoint justices whose opinions conform to those of Mr. Roosevelt, although critics have asserted this is the purposes of the reorganization he proposes.

Quotes Laws Requested.

At his conference yesterday, Wallace endeavored to solidify farm support of the reorganization by reciting the agricultural laws requested by farm groups themselves, then asserting:

"All of these proposals in one way or another require Federal action. Nobody knows what the fate of any of these would be under the Constitution as at present interpreted."

In the course of the conference Wallace minimized the importance of a statement Tuesday by L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, in opposition to the judiciary proposals. He pointed out Taber does not represent all the farmers, and characterized the latter's statement as "mild."

Wallace's warning to farmers that their programs are in jeopardy comes as the climax to months of mounting sentiment in agricultural States for more direct Federal action to control production. While Wallace and the Administration generally were refraining carefully from any expression on this issue, two conferences of farm leaders here recorded strong desire for centralized guidance of crops.

Would Limit Powers.

While the Secretary, at prompting of reporters, gave in detail his views on the Supreme Court phase of the President's proposals, he also emphasized the view that some limit should be placed to the power of lower courts to enjoin the Government, as Mr. Roosevelt also suggested.

Declaring farmers had been disturbed by the injustice which resulted from issuance of injunctions against processing taxes in many areas, while in others these taxes were free from such interference, Wallace said:

"At one time 2,000 injunctions were pending. The Attorney General couldn't keep track of them. They were handed down with very little consideration, generally."

In his discussion of the judiciary program as a whole, however, Wallace declined to predict the farm population would indorse it. He said farmers are naturally deliberative and would take "time to study it and think about it."

Turning from agriculture's stake in the program which, he said, re-

Wheeler Plan.

By Robert C. Albright.

As organized labor and Administration farm leaders bid for worker and agriculture support of the President's court plan, two liberal Senate Democrats joined yesterday in an alternative proposal for a constitutional amendment giving Congress the power to override Supreme Court decisions by a two-thirds vote of both houses.

The American Federation of Labor's executive council voted formal approval of the judiciary reorganization program, calling on labor throughout the country to "rally to the support of the President." Action came on the heels of the Labor's Non-Partisan League drive for mass labor backing.

Seeks "Veto" Power.

At the same time, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace minimized opposition by the National Grange, veteran farm organization, and said frankly he felt the proposed addition of six justices to the Supreme Court would give right of way to general welfare legislation.

At the Capitol, Senator Homer T. Bone, Northwest Progressive Democrat, hitherto silent on the court issue, joined with an outspoken opponent of high court enlargement, Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, in offering an amendment to the Constitution, giving Congress a final "veto" power over Supreme Court opinions.

"I favor this amendment over any other plan that has yet been offered from any source," was as far as Bone was willing to be quoted in opposition to the President's plan.

The proposed Wheeler-Bone amendment provides for resubmission to Congress of acts invalidated by the Supreme Court, and permits re-enactment by a two-thirds vote, but specifies "no action shall be taken by the Congress upon such question until an election shall have been held at which members of the House of Representatives are regularly by law to be chosen."

Cellar at White House.

Other developments:

Defending the President's plan, Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, said in a radio address last night that "the real question is, how soon we can have laws helping the working man and the working woman by establishing minimum wages and maximum hours, collective bargaining, unemployment insurance, and old age benefits; how soon we can help the farmers * * *."

Opposing the President's plan, Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, offered a Constitutional amendment permitting Federal judges to retire with full pay on reaching 70, and compelling them to retire with full pay at 75.

Reviving debate in the Senate, Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, charged the Supreme Court had "turned its thumbs down" on protective laws for "the poor and the helpless, the farmers, the laborers, the women and even the little children in their fights against greed and avarice."

Representative Samuel B. Pettengill, Indiana Democrat, replied to his State Legislature's favorable action on the President's plan with a letter stating: "I can only express my profound belief that a packed jury, a packed court and a stacked deck of cards are all on the same moral plane. I do not believe we

Democrats Hope to Pay Deficit by Next Month

New York, Feb. 17 (AP).—W. Forbes Morgan, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, said today he hoped to pay off the party's $430,000 deficit between now and March 15, when he will resign to devote his full time to his new job as "czar" of the liquor industry.

Most of the necessary funds for this, Morgan said, would come from Democratic victory dinners over the Nation on March 4.

Tunnel to China More Than Child's Dream With Electric 'Bug' Controlled by One Man

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17.—A new mining machine, which theoretically could bore a hole to the center of the earth or tunnel clear through, was reported today to the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers.

It works like a burrowing insect. With only one man driving, it goes ahead under its own power. It already has bored down 1,125 feet in California, through much hard rock.

The "bug" is metal. It has jaws and body, each about 15 feet long, and 5 feet in diameter. The body houses an electric motor and "legs." The legs are screw jacks to hold position against the sides of the hole being drilled.

The jaws ahead are a round, empty steel barrel, revolving under the drive of the motor. The forward edge of the barrel is fitted with teeth that cut a circular track.

The empty barrel, the "mouth," receives the loosened rock or earth. When the mouth is full, the body is disconnected and the contents of the barrel hoisted out by carles.

There is nothing in the mechanics of the "bug" to keep it from going to the center of the earth. For, engineers pointed out, as fast as the hoisting limit is reached, a chamber can be enlarged at the bottom of a bore, allowing the bug to make another lap down, while its leavings are hoisted in relays.

Senate Hears Of Big Business Labor Council

By the Associated Press.

Witnesses told a Senate committee yesterday personnel directors of 12 of the Nation's largest corporations hold monthly meetings in New York to discuss labor and other common problems.

Activities of the group, known as the special conference committee, were described before the Civil Liberties Committee by Merle C. Hale and Harry W. Anderson, past and present labor relations officers of the General Motors Corporation.

The witnesses said the organization was formed about 20 years ago and was composed chiefly of companies which had "pioneered" in employe representation plans.

Discuss Wages, Hours.

Under questioning by Chairman La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, and Senator Thomas (Democrat), Utah, the General Motors officials said such subjects as hours and wages, the social security act, unemployment insurance and the national recovery act had been discussed.

Anderson, General Motors' present representative on the committee, listed the membership as follows:

Frank Pierce, Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey; Sy Ching, United States Rubber Co.; Arthur Young, United States Steel Corporation; Joseph Larkin, Bethlehem Steel Corporation; George Kelvay, International Harvester Co.; Arthur Griffin, American Telephone & Telegraph Co.; Fred Climer, Goodyear Rubber Co.; John Holbrook, Irving Trust Co.; Frank Evans, du Pont Co.; George Pfiel, General Electric Co., and W. G. Marshall, Westinghouse Electric Co.

Hale, who formerly represented General Motors on the committee, testified that the meetings often developed "hot discussions."

Liberals in Group.

"We have both liberals and conservatives in our group," he said with a smile. Asked by La Follette if the conservatives outnumbered the liberals, Hale said they were about equally divided.

Hale said most of the members of the committee were "strong in the belief" that the employe representation or works council plan of labor relations "provided the objective" set forth under section 7a of NRA.

The witnesses said each member was provided with a brief summary after each meeting. Anderson said he had destroyed his.

"They went with the rest of them," he said. Yesterday he testified he had "stripped" the files of two of his superiors of all reports of labor activity furnished General Motors by detective agencies.

"Papers Valueless."

Asked by La Follette why he felt he had to destroy the papers, Anderson said "they were of no value to anyone else."

La Follette inquired why the Irving Trust Co, a New York bank, should be represented in a group composed of "large employers of labor."

Hale and Anderson laughingly replied they had wondered about that, but Hale said the bank's representative had kept the committee informed on business trends and "gave us the financial picture."

Both witnesses said the group had never discussed labor espionage or the activities of the civil liberties committee.

Educators Protest Spain Death Edict

By the United Press.

The Spanish Embassy Tuesday night announced upwards of 100 professors of Columbia and New York Universities and Smith College had protested to the rebel forces in Spain against the death sentence imposed on President Leopoldo Alas, of Oviedo University.

The protest was addressed to the residing officer of the Burgos Junta. It said the signers understood the sentence had been imposed on Alas for being an "intellectual who supported the elected government of Spain."

Among the signers were Dr. William Allen Nielson, president of Smith College; Franz Boas, John Dewey, J. P. Chamberlain, Leo Wolman, all of Columbia, and Willard Atkins, Charles Hodges and Carl Rauschenbush, of New York University.

Some New Dealers Believe President's Court Plan Made to Force Amendment.

By Franklyn Waltman

If President Roosevelt's proposal for packing the Supreme Court through the subterfuge of relieving court congestion by naming additional judges for those over 70 years of age were the only way in which the high tribunal could be declared as an obstacle out of his path there would be a great deal of merit on the New Deal side.

Certainly, it cannot be argued successfully that even the Supreme Court should long be permitted to thwart the will of the American people once it has been clearly expressed. Such is the New Deal argument and no fault can be found with it. The difficulty is that the New Dealers insist Mr. Roosevelt's overwhelming victory of last November is a mandate to him to sweep the court out of his way, by fair means or foul.

WALTMAN.

In view of the fact that not once during his campaign did Mr. Roosevelt suggest or intimate what he had in mind in regard to the Supreme Court, it is somewhat far-fetched to say that the voters gave him a mandate to carry out this action. Indeed, the platform on which the President ran promised to meet the impasse between the Supreme Court and New Deal by a Constitutional amendment.

Even now a few New Dealers express a suspicion that this is the President's real objective—that his court packing idea is just window-dressing and build-up for a subsequent proposal for a Constitutional amendment. The theory is that with the devious touch of a Machiavelli, the President proposed the Supreme Court packing idea in order to draw conservatives out in favor of a Constitutional amendment and that when a sufficient number have thus gone on record, he will do a quick-about-face and propose a Constitutional amendment.

It sounds fantastic and probably is, except that it is not wise to discount completely anything one hears around Washington these days. At this time Administration spokesmen are busy explaining why the constitutional amendment method of reaching their objective is not practicable and feasible and why the present Roosevelt-Cummings plan should be adopted.

They make two objections to the submission of a constitutional amendment. One is that there is difficulty in drafting an amendment which goes far enough and yet does not go too far, and that it is difficult to get all those who are in accord on the objective to agree on a specific amendment. The other objection is that at best it would take too long to get an amendment ratified and that 13 of the 48 State Legislatures, under pressure of economic groups of privilege, have an excellent chance of blocking ratification. They cite what has happened to the child labor amendment as proof of the latter contention.

Neither of these objections is convincing nor is either well grounded in fact. There is no difficulty in drafting an amendment which would require Federal judges to retire when they reach 70 years of age. Nor is there difficulty drafting an amendment to give Congress power to override a Supreme Court veto of a Congressional act, as Senators Burton K. Wheeler and Homer T. Bone have just demonstrated.

But it may be argued that the first of these two proposed constitutional amendments does not go far enough and the other too far. Drafting of an amendment which would expand Federal power over what is now regarded as intrastate commerce and would limit interpretation of "due process" admittedly would be a more difficult job for the draftsmen. But it is not impossible. Regardless of the scope of such an amendment, at least we would have a general knowledge of where we stood. That we have not under the President's plan to let him put six men on the court who would be amenable to his will.

As for the argument that the State legislatures would prove a barrier to a speedy ratification of a properly drawn amendment, the Administration spokesmen deliberately and misleadingly overlook possibility of ratification by State conventions. Their insistence that such an amendment would be submitted to State legislatures demonstrates the insincerity of their arguments.

Indeed, no amendments to the Constitution should be submitted to State legislatures. One reason is that seldom is the question involved in the proposed amendment an issue in their elections. Another is that due to gerrymandering for partisan reasons in many States, their legislatures are not truly representative of the whole State.

By suomitting a Constitutional amendment to State conventions for ratification the sentiment of the people can be ascertained. This method permits two slates of delegates to seek election to the State convention—one favoring the amendment and the other opposing it. Thus the issue can be fought out and decided without reference to personalities or extraneous issues. This is the really democratic way of amending the Constitution—and it assures a speedier consideration of the amendment after its submission.

Even under the system of submitting constitutional amendments to State legislatures the delays are not as long as the Administration would have the country believe. Of the 21 amendments to the Constitution, the first 10 were ratified en bloc. It required a little over two years. Of the remaining 11 amendments less than one year elapsed in the case of 7 of them between the date of submission and ratification; two more were ratified within 15 months and in the case of the remaining two more than two yeas elapsed.

In the case of the last amendment—the twenty-first, repealing prohibition—only nine months and 15 days elapsed between the date of submission and ratification. In the case of the twentieth or lame duck amendment only 11 months and four days elapsed. the nineteenth amendment was ratified within one year, two months and 12 days of submission and the eighteenth or prohibition amendment in one year, one month and 11 days.

And it should be remembered that in some instances ratification did not come sooner because State Legislatures were not in session.

Confronted with these facts, Administration spokesmen retort that in all these cases the country favored the amendments and that economic interests were not involved. The first part of this contention contains an inference that the Administration is afraid the country will not back it in what it now wants to do. Of course if the country is opposed to an amendment it will never be ratified—and should not.

There is some substance in the second part of the contention. Most of the constitutional amendments which have been adopted dealt with political rights and not with economic interests. But surely the sixteenth amendment, providing for an income tax, was concerned with economic interests. Nothing could bear with greater effect on wealth or princes of privilege than that amendment.

It is true that it required 3 years, 7 months and 13 days to get that amendment ratified after submission—the longest interval for any amendment. But it was ratified, and by 42 of the 48 States.

* * *

The reason the child labor amendment has not been ratified is that it was badly drawn. One result of poor draftsmanship was to arouse among religious groups fears that under it parochial and sectarian schools might some day be abolished. Oregon tried to do that and the Supreme Court stopped it. It may happen again on a national scale.

The Administration's objections to submitting a Constitutional amendment to achieve its ends boil down to nonsense. Actually they amount to a repudiation of faith in the democratic process to which the President recently has given such fulsome lip-service.

Mine Workers' Wage and Hour Plea Rejected

Lewis Demand for Shorter Week, More Pay Called 'Impossible.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17.—The soft coal industry replied "utterly impossible" today to John L. Lewis' demand for a 30-hour work week and a 15 per cent pay raise for his 400,000 bituminous coal miners.

After thus bluntly rejecting the United Mine Workers' proposals, the coal operators demanded that the present work week be increased from 35 to 40 hours, and that hourly pay rates be cut 15 per cent.

With this exchange, negotiations toward a new wage and hour agreement got under way. The present contract expires at midnight, March 31.

Both Lewis and Charles P. O'Neill, spokesman for the operators, expressed hope the new agreement could be reached without a strike, but Lewis warned the operators that the miners would not work April 1 without a contract.

The miners and operators stated their demands at the opening session of the Appalachian joint wage conference. Technically, this conference fixes wages and hours only for the commercial mines in the vast Appalachian fields, reaching from central Pennsylvania to Tennessee.

All other mine wages and hours, however, are based on the Appalachian standard.

The increase the miners asked would amount to 50 cents a day for those men hired by the day, bringing the basic daily wage from $5.59 to $6 in the North and from $5.10 to $5.60 in the South.

The miners also asked for an increase of 15 cents in the combined cutting and loading rate (2 cents to the cutter and 13 to the loader); 25 cents a ton increase for pick mining and 20 per cent for yardage and deadwork.

The next step in the negotiations will be the appointment of a joint committee to draft the new agreement. Both miners and operators expressed an opinion this committee would not get down to work for two or three weeks.

Along with the cut in hours and the pay increase, the miners demanded a guaranteed income of $1,2000 a year and two weeks' vacation with pay each year.

U. A. W. A. Seeks Dispute Board.

Detroit, Feb. 17 (AP).—The United Automobile Workers pointed their negotiations with General Motors tonight toward establishment of a national board to rule on disputes which cannot be settled by union shop committees or plant managers.

In a series of conferences with corporation officials, provided for in the agreement that ended the paralyzing General Motors strikes last week, the union is pressing for acceptance of its demands left unsettled by that document.

Wyndham Mortimer, first vice president heading the union conferees, said the negotiators were considering machinery for handling of local grievances and that when that is out of the way they would move toward discussing details of a national tribunal.

He said the makeup and scope of the board had not yet been discussed.

Mortimer said after today's conferences that General Motors had agreed to remove from a Flint Chevrolet plant 1,000 clubs which he said company police carried into the plant Monday.

In return, Mortimer said, the union agreed that it would cease soliciting of non-union workers in company plants.

Textile Union Seeks Raise.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Vice President Horace Riviere, of the United Textile Workers of America, C. I. O. affiliate, tonight announced that his union would make immediate demands for a 10 per cent wage increase and a substantial decrease in the individual work load throughout New England.

A. F. L. Court Comment Text

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor officially approves the recommendation of the President of the United States contained in the message he transmitted to Congress under date of February 5 providing for a reorganization of the Federal judiciary.

The council arrived at its decision to support the President's recommendation after painstaking investigation and most careful thought and study. It was the opinion of the executive council that the sincere and earnest desire of labor for judiciary reform and for the realization of social and economic advancement, could be promoted better through the acceptance and application of the President's recommendation, rather than through the slow, tedious process of a constitutional amendment.

The council fully believes that labor throughout the United States, as represented by the American Federation of Labor, will rally to the support of the President in the recommendation which he made.

It is the purpose of the executive council to call upon labor throughout the entire country to give the President's plan for judiciary reform a full measure of support. National and international unions, State federations of labor and city central bodies, all chartered by the American Federation of Labor, will be called upon to rally to the support of the President, and to acquaint the members of Congress with the desire of labor and labor's friends for favorable action upon the President's recommendation at the earliest possible date.

'Right of Way' Plea Is Denied In Taxi Appeal

Must Exert Greater Than Ordinary Care, Higher Court Declares.

Taxicab drivers owe "extraordinary care" to their paid passengers, the United States Court of Appeals ruled yesterday in reversing a decision of a District Court that had held blameless a cab driver and the Independent Taxi Owners' Association.

A suit, brought by Catherine M. Francis, an employe of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, had asked damages because an automobile collided with the cab in which she was riding at First and F streets northwest. Through Attorney Marcus Borchardt she claimed the cab, having her as a passenger, should have exercised every care to avoid an accident.

At the trial of the suit, there was much evidence as to which car had the right of way at the time of the accident. The appellate court, determining this question, said:

"* * * The duty of a common carrier to its passenger is paramount to the right of a common carrier to pursue its right of way in respect of another car." That point of law was not emphasized by the trial judge and resulted in the appellate court holding there had not been a fair trial and ordering another trial. The court continued:

"The jury, * * * might have found that such conduct would have been less than the extraordinary care owned the plaintiff passenger, that is, might have found that the taxicab driver should have stopped and permitted the private car to pass, regardless of the fact that technically the taxicab had the right of way."

The case will be retried in District Court with the cab company bearing the onus of showing that the other car should have stopped and that it did its whole duty to the passenger.

Elliott Rules Worker Leaves Must Be Paid

Those Leaving U. S. Service Held Responsible for Advanced Time.

Federal employes are liable to the Government for any advance sick leave granted them in the event of their quitting their jobs, Acting Comptroller General Elliott ruled yesterday.

The ruling was handed down at the request of the Navy Department which wanted to know if disbursing officers would be held personally liable for any advance pay given employes, sick-leave being classed as advance pay.

Under Federal regulations Government workers may obtain 30 days sick leave in excess of what they have earned. The Navy wanted a ruling on whether such excess leave could be sued for if the employe's "indebtedness should be reported to the Comptroller General for collection in the usual manner." The "usual manner" is through a lawsuit filed by the Attorney General.

The Comptroller General maintains a file of all debts due the United States Government. In the event the former employe goes into private business, he will be sued. If he should return to Government service the debt will be deducted from his salary.

In laying the question before the Comptroller General, the Navy Department said it was holding up all advance sick-leaves pending a decision, unless the applicant for leave had sufficient funds to his credit to offset the leave.

"The Government collects all debts due it," a spokesman for the Comptroller said yesterday. "If it cannot obtain settlement through negotiation, a lawsuit is begun."

Dust Blizzard Sufferers Ask Federal Help

Visibility Zero, Schools Close in Panhandle Soil Crisis.

By the Associated Press.

Guymon, Okla., Feb. — Swirling "black blizzards"—bringing threats to crops and health—turned day into night in parts of Oklahoma today while wind-blown top soil spread its haze over sections of Kansas, Texas and Colorado.

Some Oklahoma Panhandle farmers demanded Government relief as the dust storm, fourth in as many days, reached serious proportions.

Schools were closed as the dust gloom enveloped Texas County, in the Oklahoma Panhandle. Visibility was zero. Buses were stranded. Highway traffic was paralyzed. Street lights burned dimly throughout the day.

There was a shortage of dust masks. Guymon stores sold out their supply yesterday.

Southwestern Kansas residents donned the masks for the first time this season at Liberal. Hugoton schools were closed, and a revival meeting at Hugoton was postponed.

Two Hugoton, Kans., church basements were available as emergency hospitals. Health authorities banned all public gatherings and the Stevens County Red Cross Chapter wired a request for nurses to help doctors handle flu and pneumonia which, aggravated by dust, have caused 11 deaths in the last few days in Hugoton, a town of 1,500.

Naval Academy Holding Cadets Forced to Quit

Age-old Navy traditions were shattered yesterday when Navy Academy authorities held 135 former midshipmen, forced to resign last Saturday, pending an investigation of the case of colored Cadet James L. Johnson, jr., numbered among those who failed to pass the mid-year exams.

The 135 former cadets were found deficient in studies or physical examinations, and their resignations were automatic, in line with Navy customs. In the past, however, former midshipmen have always been dismissed from the academy a day or two after resigning.

Johnson, whose forced resignation was accepted Saturday by Secretary Swanson, had been declared deficient in English and history, had exceeded his allowance of demerits and failed to pass an eyesight examination.

Mitchell Protests.

Representative Arthur W. Mitchell, colored, who appointed the first-year man, charged his resignation was the result of "railroading" by Annapolis authorities, and took his complaint to the President. Although President Roosevelt declined comment, Mitchell expressed his approval of the President's attitude toward the matter.

Meanwhile, according to the Associated Press, 134 white boys and Johnson are living in Bancroft Hall, principal Annapolis dormitory, as "civilians," pending action on Johnson's dismissal.

Commenting on the precedent-shattering procedure, Mitchell last night said the President was "showing the right attitude," and added, that he, Mitchell, would take no immediate steps in the case.

"The Navy's age-old system of doing what they please without regard to right has about come to an end," Mitchell said. He stated he felt Academy authorities had been unfair to many others, in addition to Johnson.

Custom Disregarded.

Retention of the cadets days after they should have left the academy followed Mitchell's Monday conference with the President. The same afternoon it developed that Johnson, himself, was not leaving the academy immediately, despite the fact his room had been dismantled and custom decreed immediate departure.

Johnson, who lives at 1737 S street northwest, was the first colored boy at the academy in 62 years. Although three others have entered Annapolis, none of them have been graduated.

Tuesday, Representative Mitchell announced that if Johnson's case was allowed to go without investigation, he would appoint two more colored boys to the academy. He stated that he would appoint one of them in any event, making sure the appointee could not be refused entrance for either scholastic or physical deficiencies.

Colored Man, 38, White Bride, 14, Detained in West

Seattle, Feb. 17 (AP).—Police detained a 14-year-old white girl and 38-year-old colored man today while they investigated their reported marriage here Sunday. The girl's parents also were detained without charge.

The policewomen's report stated the girl, Delta Palmer, 14, asserted staunchly her love for the colored man, John Lee Menefield, and that they were accompanied by Delta's parents, Charles F. Palmer, 59, and his wife, Anna, 50, when a marriage license was issued February 9, at Port Orchard, Wash. Policewomen said the girl observed her fourteenth birthday January 14, but that her age appeared as 18 on the marriage license application. She is a grammar school pupil.

Gen. Haly did night and day duty at city hall throughout the flood crisis. When the situation was in hand he was taken to the Baptist Hospital here suffering from pneumonia.

Illinois Democrats Balk G. O. P. Fight on Court

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 17 (AP).—A Republican plan to censure President Roosevelt's Supreme Court reorganization proposal was crushed by the Democratic majority in the Illinois House of Representatives yesterday.

The Democrats, by a 77 to 55 vote that followed straight party lines, forced the Republican resolution into the Democratic controlled executive committee. Thus, immediate action was forestalled on the effort to express opposition to increasing the number of Supreme Court justices.

Gen. Johnson Favors Sheppard Profit Bill

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former NRA administrator and a World War general staff officer, said Tuesday he preferred the Sheppard war profits bill to other proposals for war-time conscription.

Johnson, testifying before the Senate Military Committee, said, however, there was "very great doubt" in his mind as to the wisdom of attempting such legislation in advance of war.

The fire, which broke out at 7:45 p. m., was reported still smouldering late tonight, but under control. There was no panic, institution officers reported.

Rector's Aid Society Needs Wisdom of a Solomon

Post Staff Photos.

Mrs. Fleming-Holland, right (Underwood & Underwood), won't permit her home, pictured at top, to be included in the Alexandria tour of historic homes for benefit of the Rector's Aid Society of St. Paul's Church, if that of her neighbor, John L. Lewis, lower left, is also on the itinerary. She says she has nothing against the mine worker personally but is against his sponsoring of the General Motors sit-down strike.

Capital, Labor 'Fight' Flares; Lewis' Neighbor Bars Visitors

By Eugene Warner.

Capital and Labor battled it out in Alexandria yesterday, historic town of the founding fathers, on the question of whether a sightseer who sets foot in the home of John L. Lewis is a fit person to enter the mansion of Mrs. Fleming-Holland.

Mrs. Fleming-Holland said: "No!"

John L. Lewis, shaggy miner, said nothing. He is in New York.

The two are neighbors. The controversy arose when Mrs. Fleming-Holland refused to permit sightseers on tour under the auspices of the Rector's Aid Society of St. Paul's Episcopal Church to inspect her new and expensive home if John L. Lewis' home was included in the tour.

Not that she has anything personal against Mr. Lewis. It's just the fact that he sponsored the General Motors sit-down strike, which Mrs. Fleming-Holland declared unconstitutional and un-American. Over the teacups last week she told a small group of ladies she was sorry but she just couldn't throw her home open so long as the Lewis home was on the tour too.

John L. Lewis' place is probably more interesting historically than is Mrs. Fleming-Holland's, but when it comes to size and class Mrs. Fleming Holland's has it all over the mine chief's. She has a feudal wall built around the large, rambling white building reconstructed at a cost of $60,000, and entrance to the grounds is obtained with the consent of a butler.

Lewis lives at 212 South Fairfax street in a white clapboard house built by Dr. William Brown, Revolutionary doctor, in 1775. It is furnished with antiques, a wall sided with books, and fine old fireplaces.

Mrs. Fleming-Holland, on the other hand, occupies a house once owned by the Gensberger family. The house The house is of interest as a showplace of czarist furniture—one table belonged to Catherine the Great—and royal French household goods, it has passed everything in Alexandria. The thrice-married Mrs. Fleming-Holland's last husband was William Battin, a vice president of International Business Machines. She plays the piano with a professional touch.

So the ladies of St. Paul's against their will have been forced into a dilemma. They would like to include both places, naturally, on their tours, but apparently they must choose between one or the other. They decided to postpone their first tour until May instead of staging it this month, after Mrs. Fleming-Holland's ultimatum.

By that time Mr. Lewis may have vacated to move into the old home of Col. Richard Brand Lee, first cousin of Robert E. Lee. The general lived just across the street from the colonel. Mr. Lewis has bought Col. Lee's house but can't get in because the present tenant's lease hasn't expired. The situation is really complicated.

Security Official Warns Tradesman

G. R. Parker, regional director of the Social Security Board, yesterday warned Washington businessmen against attempts here to sell record systems on the basis that they have been approved by the board.

"The board has consistently refused to approve any system of record keeping or accounting for use with social security records," Parker said.

Salesmen representing several firms have called on Washington business houses in the last few days with record systems allegedly approved by the Federal Government, Parker reported.

Japanese Foil Hara-Kiri Cult; 4 Girls Seized

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo (Thursday) Feb. 18.—Police held ten members of a Buddhist "Let's Die League," five of whom had tried to commit hara-kiri, and began a nation wide search for their remaining four comrades today.

Four of the eight who put out into Tokyo Bay in a boat were seized after they landed at a different spot on the waterfront. The five who tried to disembowel themselves in front of or inside Tokyo public buildings—and whose example officers had feared those in the boat would follow—were under arrest, along with one other.

Four girls, ranging in age from 19 to 26, also were taken into custody. Two resisted arrest, shouting "Let's die. Let's die," and waving ancient Japanese swords about their heads.

Four Still at Large.

Police said the organization—members of which were accused of plotting widespread assassinations of prominent personages in July, 1933—had been reduced in numbers from 28 to 14 since that time.

Blood-sealed documents found in the possession of the would-be suicides indicated they attempted hara-kiri because of alleged grievances against the government, which they accused of taking away their religious freedom.

Watchful police, who had kept the "Let's Die" adherents under surveillance since the 1933 plot accusations, prevented the five from completing their self-destruction outside the Emperor's palace, the metropolitan police headquarters, the foreign minister's official residence and the Parliament Building, and inside one other structure.

Four of the sect knelt in the streets and shoved daggers into their abdomens, but they were arrested and rushed to hospitals before they made fatal wounds.

Police who raided the home of Egawa, the alleged leader, in Kamata, an outlying ward of Tokyo, found he had fled.

At the league's headquarters, officers found two young women—Shizue Shizu, 20, and Miyo Imai, 19—and a man, Masanobu Suzuki, 20, beating on a giant drum.

One of the girls shouted defiance and the other grabbed an ancient Japanese sword which she flourished about her head, yelling "let's die! Let's die!"

Literature Seized.

Although all three resisted arrest, they were taken into custody. Officers confiscated a large quantity of literature which they said was incriminating.

Another woman, Kiwa Imai, 24, was arrested when she came to the league's headquarters later. Then Chise Imai, a 26-year-old woman, surrendered voluntarily.

Officers said they believed the missing four were lurking near the organization's offices or the Nichiren Buddhist Cathedral in Shizuoka prefecture, which members were accused of plotting to burn in 1933.

The league was organized to "reform" the Nichiren sect by acts of violence and self-sacrifice, and the attempts at hara-kiri, officers said they believed, were part of the "purification" program.

Eye Bill Introduced.

A bill to exempt physicians and surgeons and marketers of eye glasses who do not fit them from the District bill regulating optometry was introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois.

Police Chase, Seize Gunman After Holdup

Grocery Store Robbed, Customers Menaced by Bandit.

An unmasked colored gunman held up the manager and 12 patrons in a Sanitary Grocery store at 1533 Eleventh street northwest early last night, escaped in a commandeered taxi with $60, only to be captured after policemen from a pursuing squad car cornered him in a house and made him drop his revolver and surrender.

Sauntering into the store, which was filled with customers making last-minute supper purchases, the robber, who later told police his name was Tom Claude Barber, 23, commanded Eugene F. Wemple, the manager, who lives at 4306 Third street northwest, to put up his hands.

Then, brandishing his nickel-plated pistol, he forced the 12 customers into a corner.

Then he rifled the cash register of $39 in cash and $21 in checks.

Streaking from the doroway, the robber put his pistol in the ribs of a cab driver whose taxi was parked nearby, and climbed in. Just as the machine started away, Wemple rushed down the street, yelling he had been robbed.

A scout car was nearby, and sped to the scene just as the taxi was gaining speed.

Wemple pointed at the disappearing cab.

"He's in there," he yelled.

The car pursued the cab, zigzagging through the traffic, to the 1200 block of P street northwest. Meanwhile another squad car had joined in the chase.

At 1206 P street the robber leaped from the moving cab and ran into the house.

Police cornered him in a downstairs room.

"If you move, we'll shoot," they commanded.

The man surrendered. At the Second Precinct jail he gave his name to police, who recovered the money.

"I just did it because I was hard up and I needed money," he told officials.

French Envoy Denies Seeking American Loan

New Ambassador Declares Improvement Sought in Economic Condition.

"I have no statement to make," he said, through an embassy interpreter. "Later I will have something to say when I present my credentials to the President."

Nattily attired and effecting the black fedora beloved by the boulevardier, Ambassador Bonnet was accompanied by his wife and a 3-year-old adopted son, Alain. They were met by a large force of the French Embassy staff. Three maids and 27 pieces of baggage made up the entourage.

Mme. Bonnet, who speaks fluent English, revealed that this was their first trip to America. "I am so thrilled with America," she gushed, "that I am really too excited to talk rationally."

The Ambassador appeared calm, in contrast to his New York mien, where he was reported beaming good will. To diplomats and interviewers who had met him aboard the French liner Ile de France, he said in a formal statement:

"I did not come to secure a loan for the French government. I have come to carry on the work of establishing relations between the two sister republics, France and the United States, and to seek a further improvement in economic conditions which started when I signed the recent trade agreement with this country."

The Ambassador confessed that he has studied English "several hours a day" preparing for his new post, and he proudly displayed his proficiency by reading several paragraphs of a printed statement.

M. Bonnet succeeds Andre de Laboulaye, who left for home Tuesday. According to unofficial advices, the latter is slated to be retired from diplomatic service.

Indian Extremists Fail To Sweep Elections

Bombay, India, Feb. 17 (AP).—Indians' dreams of complete independence were jolted unexpectedly today when the extremist Congress party won outright control of only three of eight legislatures in provincial elections.

Congress leaders had expected that with a greater show of strength Great Britain's plan of limited self-government would collapse and, as a result, India would win complete independence.

Parliamentary Tangle Delays Red Rider Fate

ular order," and Taber shouted, "I object."

The Senate debate was the most lively on local legislation this session and contrasted sharply with the calmness with which the Wheeler bill was passed only a few days ago.

"I think that no problem that ever has been considered by either branch of Congress has had expended on it more nonsense than this so-called 'red-rider,' Senator Glass said.

"What is the 'red-rider'? It is simply a prohibition against the teaching and advocacy of the miserable doctrine of communism, thus poisoning the minds of immature children about a problem that very few grown-ups know anything about."

Robinson Comments.

Said Senator Robinson:

"We do not put such provisions in other appropriations bills. We do not say that no part of the funds appropriated to pay the salaries of Representatives or Senators shall be available to those who advocate communism.

"We do not make that applicable to executives of the Government Why apply it to a single class of employes in the District of Columbia?"

Senator Wheeler, after noting that children are unreliable as reporters of what teachers say, observed:

"There are many people in the United States today who are denouncing the President of the United States because of his advocacy of a proposal to put six additional justices upon the Supreme Court and suggest that that is communism. What is communism?"

After commenting that communism under Stalin is one thing and under Trotzky another, he continued:

"The difficulty is that when this hysteria sweeps the country, as it does at times, people completely lose their sense of balance and they come forward and say: 'This man is a communist!'"

The way such legislation as the "red rider" generates, he said, is that children come home with false reports on teachers and the "parents become hysterical and pass it along to somebody else and that person to somebody else and finally some of these so-called 'crackpots' around Washington, who always are trying to look after the patriotism of the people of the United States, and they think they carry all the patriotism there is in the world on their breasts, come to Congress and ask Congress solemnly to pass a law to the effect that the teachers in the District of Columbia shall be forbidden to teach or advocate communism notwithstanding the oath they take to support the Constitution."

McCarl Criticized.

Former Comptroller General J. Raymond McCarl came in for criticism from all sides.

"The trouble about the whole matter," said Senator Glass, "has been the most astonishing maladministration of a very simple statute of which I ever have had any knowledge, and for the one time in the 15 years of service the Comptroller General gave the most incredible opinion that any public official ever gave and that was that every school teacher should each month take an oath that he or she had not taught or advocated communism in the public schools.

"There is not a word or sentence in the statute that requires such action, or by implication would seem to require it."

The McCarl ruling was made after an appeal had been made to him by former Representative Thomas L. Blanton, author of the "red rider."

Senator Robinson, who had argued with Glass about the rider itself, agreed as to the McCarl interpretation.

"I agree that the action of the Comptroller General, in requiring all school teachers in the District to swear over and over that they were not advocating or teaching Communism was a foolish act, and more than anything else that has occurred it impeaches the record of his administration."

Senator Glass agreed with his opponents that the rider never should have been enacted into law. He said he was opposed to such riders on appropriation bills.

Ballou Letter Read.

"I was not present at the meeting when this was done," he said, "although I find my name attached to the conference report."

Retorting to Senator Robinson's suggestion that the prohibition be broadened, Senator Glass said:

"I do not think the United States Senators engage in the business of teaching school children.

"My only fear in the matter is that if we make an outright repeal of the language it will mean an invitation to the teachers to teach all the communism they want."

Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, started the debate when he stated that he had been requested "by a number of citizens of the District" to ask that the bill be referred to committee so that hearings might be held.

Other Senators immediately pointed out that ample hearings had been held.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, entered the discussion long enough to state that he was in favor of outright repeal of the "red-rider" and that he would like an opportunity to show "that the substitute for direct repeal does not accomplish anything."

Wheeler read a letter from Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, showing that not only teachers but janitors and other school employes are required to take the monthly oath that they do not teach or advocate communism.

Malaga Evacuation Termed 'Terrible' by Physician Witness

By the Associated Press.

Valencia, Feb. 17.—Dr. Norman Bethune, of Montreal, tonight described the flight of 150,000 men, women and children from Malaga as "the most terrible evacuation of a city in modern times."

(Malaga, southern Spanish seaport, was captured February 8 by the insurgents in the Spanish civil war.)

Dr. Bethune, head of the Spanish-American Blood Transfusion Institute, said he witnessed the evacuation during a trip from Barcelona with a truck-load of refrigerated blood for transfusions.

"Imagine 150,000 men, women and children setting out for safety to a town situated more than 100 miles away with only one road to take on a journey requiring five days and five nights at least," he said.

"There was no food to be found in the villages and there were no trains or buses to transport them.

"They staggered and stumbled, with cut and bruised feet, along the white flint road while the Fascists (insurgents) bombed them from the air and from the sea."

"There were thousands of children," he declared.

"The incessant stream of people became so dense we barely could force our cars through them.

"We met so many distressed women and children we decided to turn back and start transporting the worst cases to safety.

"But it was difficult to choose which to take.

"Our car was besieged by a mob of frantic mothers and fathers who held up to us their children with their faces swollen and congested by four days of sun and dust.

"Many old people simply gave up the struggle and laid down beside the road to wait for death.

"We first decided to take only children and mothers. Then the separation of fathers and children, husbands and wives became too cruel to bear. We finished by transporting to Almeria the families with the largest number of children and children without parents."

"On the evening of the twelfth, when the little seaport of Almeria was completely filled with refugees who thought they had reached a haven of safety, German and Italian airplanes dropped ten bombs in the very center of town, where refugees were sleeping huddled so closely together on the main street that an auto could pass only with great difficulty.

"After the planes passed I picked up three dead children from the pavement where they had been standing in line waiting for a cup of preserved milk and a handful of dry bread, the only food some of them had for days.

"The street was a shambles of dead and dying, lighted only by the orange glare of burning buildings. In the semi-darkness the moans of wounded children and the shrieks of agonized mothers rose in a massed cry higher and higher to a pitch of intolerable intensity."

Motorist Says It With TNT About Maryland Roads

Thurston, Md., Feb. 17 (AP).—A Frederick County motorist, irked at the condition of roads in this section, boiled over about it. In fact, he blew up—his automobile.

L. I. Gregg of Dickerson, with other residents, has been protesting against impassable highways. When his automobile mired down in a mud hole, he said it with dynamite—staging a practical demonstration of the sentiment of the Farm Neighbors League of Thurston, which recently passed a resolution to pay no county taxes until Thurston was provided with roads "worthy of a civilized community."

Gregg was en route home Sunday night when he hit the mud-hole. Neighbors and garage men found their efforts to free the machine only caused it to sink deeper in the muck. Somebody suggested dynamite. Motorists, lined up behind Gregg's 1926-model car, agreed their time was worth something and took up a collection. The amount they collected remained a secret—but it satisfied Gregg.

He obtained several sticks of dynamite from a nearby farm. The blast lifted the machine out of the mire and dropped it, a mass of wreckage, along the side of the road.

'Mixup' Caused Separation, Says Julian Reynolds

New York, Feb. 17 (AP).—Julian Louis Reynolds, wealthy young tobacco heir, stammeringly explained last night how he came to be "more or less separated" from his prankish bride, Helene Fortescue Reynolds.

Mrs. Reynolds, 24-year-old sister of Thalia Massie, victim in an Hawaiian assault case five years ago, remained hidden at the home of her husband's parents.

Reynolds inserted an advertisement in a morning paper saying his wife had left him and he would "not be responsible for her debts." Later he amended this in a statement to the press that the separation was not necessarily permanent.

He said the ad was the result of a "mixup over an account."

Rebel Leaders Say Madrid's Fall Is Near

Insurgents Concentrate Attack on Important Jarama Front.

By the Associated Press.

Avila, Spain, Feb. 17.—Insurgent leaders, their troops in furious new combat with the government army east of the Jarama River, announced today the last great battle of Madrid might be under way.

In spring-like sunshine, the insurgent forces smashed at the enemy on the Jarama front, unleashing all the forces of their war machine. Planes, droping deadly bombs, joined in the attack with artillery, tanks and machine gun fire of ground forces.

So intense was the fire between the deadlocked civil war combatants that newspaper correspondents were barred from the front, presumably for their own safety.

Gen. Gonzalo Quiepo de Llano, southern insurgent commander, said in a radio address the struggle might be the final great battle for the shell scarred Spanish capital.

An insurgent victory on the Jarama River front not only would strangle the capital by cutting off supply roads to the southeastern sector, but also would enable Generalissimo Francisco Franco's men to advnace rapidly to the eastern edge of the city.

2 Violent Offensives.

Madrid, Feb. 17 (AP).—Besieged government defenders of Madrid struck back at insurgent armies in two violent offensive waves today, determined deseperately to hold communication arteries on the Jarama front, southeast of the city.

The dual push signalized the closing hours of the seventh month of Spanish civil war.

Border Patrol Increased.

Paris, Feb. 17 (AP).—The Navy ministry invited reserves and retired Naval officers tonight to serve as shipping inspectors for the international "hands-off-Spain" committee in its efforts to localize the Spanish Civil War.

OzakiDemands Pact of Peace With Moscow

Japanese Liberal Assails Army Rule, Accord With Germany.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Feb. 17.—Japan's liberal leadership came out today for a Russo-Japanese pact of peace, expressed amazement that "Japan can shake hands with a country like Germany" and attacked the army for trying to "guide" the Nation.

Thus Yukio Ozaki, veteran liberal, continued the parliamentary attack which, some observers believed, might result in army demands on new Premier Senjuro Hayashi for dissolution of the recalcitrant diet. That would mean a general election.

Ozaki, who is 78, added his thrusts to the assaults on the big army budget, said the German-Japanese pact against communism would help no one but the Nazis since communism was an "empty thought" in Japan, and said a non-aggression pact with Russia would be Japan's best defense hope.

He accused the military of acting without orders from its supreme commander, the Emperor, and demanded to know if Japanese rearmament was to meet an internal or external threat, one by land or by sea.

The Premier, himself replying to Ozaki, said diplomatic methods were to be preferred, but that Japan must be prepared to fight if necessary. The post-Manchurian situation, he added, demanded increases in defensive armaments.

Governor of New York Saves Two From Chair

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 17 (AP).—Gov. Lehman yesterday commuted to life imprisonment the death sentences of Henry H. Stevens, 19, and Charles A. Waterbury, 20, convicted murderers, slated to die Thursday night in Sing Sing Prison.

They were convicted of killing Charles Salisbury, 78, president of the board of directors of the Lacona National Bank, during a hold-up, May, 1936.

Ousted U. S. Lawyer, Wife to Leave Brazil

Rio de Janeiro, Feb. 17 (AP).—Reservations for David Levinson, Philadelphia attorney requested to leave Brazil, and his wife have been made aboard the steamship Northern Prince, sailing for the United States, February 18, officers of the Prince Line disclosed yesterday.

Levinson, who was extended an official "invitation" to leave the country because he was attorney for two prisoners accused of plotting a Communist uprising in Brazil, declined to comment on arrangements made for his departure.

U.S. Senator Gerald P. Nye says:

"I have smoked Luckies off and on ever since my first term in the Senate 11 years ago, and I have always enjoyed their taste and the feeling of comfort and safety a light smoke gives my throat. I have done a great deal of public speaking, on the floor of the Senate, over the radio and at conferences. Necessarily this results in a strain on the voice. So naturally, in smoking, I have to think of my throat—and I have found that a light smoke is suitable to my throat."

Gerald P. Nye

HON. GERALD P. NYE
U. S. SENATOR FROM NORTH DAKOTA

In a recent independent survey, an overwhelming majority of lawyers, doctors, lecturers, scientists, etc., who said they smoked cigarettes, expressed their personal preference for a light smoke.

Senator Nye's statement verifies the wisdom of this preference and so do leading artists of radio, stage, screen and opera, whose voices are their fortunes, and who choose Luckies, a light smoke. volves about the issue whether agriculture is the "purely local matter" the Supreme Court AAA decision said it was. Wallace declared the reorganization program involves the broader question whether democracy can be made to work.

"The great question," he said, "is whether in the age of modern machine production and modern transportation the Government is to have the power to promote the general welfare. If the Government doesn't have the power, when economic disaster comes—as in 1932—you have much talk about turning everything over to a strong central power. Whenever you get a large number of people in a desperate situation, that is likely to be the result. A reasonable exercise of the power of government, under a reasonable interpretation of the Constitution, would help us to avoid getting into such a situation.

"The question is whether under existing precedents as set forth by the court, adequate Federal power exists. I am on the side of democratic processes and against letting us be forced into a situation where there will be clamor to put everything in the hands of a strong man."

Rubinoff Sued for $500,000 By New York Night Club Girl

Violinist Denies Promises to Marry Hat Checker; Trip to Philadelphia Is Described by Attorney in Court.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17.—Peggy Garcia, soft-spoken hat check girl from Roanoke, Va., today hiked to $500,000 the amount she wants David Rubinoff, the violinist, to pay her for alleged seduction and breach of promise.

As the trial opened in supreme court Miss Garcia's attorney, Bernard Sandler, announced the damages asked by the former friend of Rubinoff were up $400,000 above the $100,000 figure she set last week.

Rubinoff's counsel, Abraham Halperin, did not oppose the increased demand, but he brought the plaintiff to the verge of tears with a lengthy attack on her character.

Tells of Meeting.

He quoted her as saying upon introduction to Rubinoff in a Harlem night club, "If you're Dave Rubinoff, then I'm Cleopatra."

This meeting took place in March, 1933, when Miss Garcia was 19, Sandler said, and the seduction occurred in June of the same year in a Philadelphia hotel after Rubinoff, according to Sandler, had promised to marry her.

The violinist's counsel, however, painted a far different picture in his opening for the defense.

He said Miss Garcia was employed as a taxi dancer in 1932 and, as such, she met a "certain man" and entered into intimate relations with him. She saw him four times a week, Halperin asserted, until he was arrested for burglary in May, 1933—a month before she alleges she capitulated to Rubinoff's advances.

Charges Hotel Affairs.

Simultaneously, she added, she was carrying on an affair with a man who paid her hotel bills and whom she introduced as her father. Besides making excursions to other hotels, Halperin charged, she was friendly with some of the hotel employes.

Halperin denied Rubinoff ever promised to marry her and declared that her trip to Philadelphia was voluntary—"merely a part of the scheme on which to base this lawsuit."

On her way back to New York, he said, she saw a big diamond ring on a man on the train and boasted she would have it before the end of the trip.

McNutt Named To Philippines By Roosevelt

Former Indiana Governor Will Join in Parley With Quezon.

too far removed to keep in close touch with the political situation in this country, was apparent.

While saying he had not placed any definite limit to the period of his service in the Philippines, he indicated that he did not expect to remain there long.

McNutt will take the post vacated by Frank Murphy, who stepped from the High Commissionership into a still more favored status in Administration circles by entering the race for Governor of Michigan last fall at a time it appeared the Democratic party would be in need of his popularity and vote-getting ability in that State. Murphy was granted a leave by the President in order to make the gubernatorial race, and he carried the State along with the National Democratic ticket. Thus he left a position with a salary of $18,000 a year for one paying $5,000

Another Post Hinted.

Whether some other post is in mind for McNutt has not been revealed, but the fact that he does not expect to remain long in Manila gives credence to the belief of some that such is the case.

McNutt has been reported to be seeking appointment as Secretary of War. He was said to prefer the Cabinet position to the high commissionership.

Following the death of Secretary of War George H. Dern last August, Asssistant Secretary Harry Woodring served as Acting Secretary for almost a month. On September 25, however, Woodring was named Secretary of War, it being explained the appointment was made at that time because of a requirement that the post be filled within 30 days after the death of the Cabinet member. It was said the appointment was temporary and that the position was not expected to be filled permanently until after the election.

Political Storm Center.

McNutt, Harvard graduate, former national commander of the American Legion and former dean of the law school of the University of Indiana, has been a striking figure in the politics of Indiana.

"Dictatorship" charges have been hurled at him in the State because of the power he obtained from the Legislature, but he carried the State through the depression in generally good condition, it was conceded in the 1936 campaign, and even had a surplus in the State treasury. It was a surplus, however, that caused loud protests and demands for reduction in the great number of persons on the State pay roll. The surplus was accumulated by reason of McNutt's gross income tax law in the State, n act that was termed a "glorified sales and income tax combined." But despite the protests and the political charges, the Democrats swept Indiana, and McNutt, his term ended, was left free to seek new honors.

Tall, handsome, with prematurely white hair, he is 45 years old, of pleasant ingratiating manner, an accomplished public speaker, fond of practically all forms of sport and shares the Army love of poker. During the World War he was an Artillery instructor in officers' training camps and commanding officer of various units of the Field Artillery Reserve.

Mrs. McNutt was the former Kathleen Timolat, of San Antonio, Tex., whom he met while he was stationed there in the Army. They have a 15-year-old daughter.

Until the $750,000 official residence at Manila is completed, the McNutts will reside at Baguio, mountain resort 150 miles from Manila.

Citizens' Group Urges D. C. Colored Hospital

A resolution indorsing a proposed colored municipal hospital or placement of colored physicians and surgeons on the Gallinger Hospital staff, was adopted last night at a meeting of the Lincoln Citizens Association in the Liberty Baptist Church. The Commissioners were asked to increase the number of nurses and consultant facilities at the Glenn Dale Hospital, following a stereopticon lecture by Mrs. Cora Grant.

The association decided to continue to work for installatoin of traffic lights at Washington Circle, and for underpasses or overpasses for the Pennsylvania Railroad crossings in Deanwood and Kenilworth, where two school children were injured this week.

is being held at the Third Precinct for investigation.

He denied having any knowledge of the taxicab being pushed into the Potomac, and told police he did not even know Kensinger. He was fingerprinted and photographed at Police Headquarters, where records showed he had not been arrested previously.

At the preliminary hearing yesterday, Blick and Capt. Miller testified they went to the Pennsylvania avenue headquarters searching for Emmett Warring. They confiscated elaborate office equipment, an expensive coin auditing machine and nearly $2,000 in cash. the three men were arrested, but Emmett was not in the place.

Blick told Commissioner Turnage he has not been able to find Emmett despite numerous other raids.

"You could find him if you wanted to," Whalen remarked. "Inspector Thompson could produce him in half an hour."

Blick said to Whalen:

"If you bring him here at 10 a. m. today I'll arrest him."

Whalen assented.

Before the raid Tuesday night a "plant" on the place reported Emmett was in the habit of entering the building each evening about 7:30 p. m. The night of the raid, however, he failed to appear.

This fact furthered the suspicions of police officials that some members of the department are close to the gang and managed to tip them off of impending action.

When Emmett Warring appears in the commissioner's office today it will make his first brush with the law since 1931, despite the fact that his numbers activities have been under investigation by police for a long time.

His record shows convictions only for charges of being drunk and disorderly. A charge of possessing illegal liquor lodged against him in 1928 was nolle prossed.

Rules 'Revolt' In D. C. Courts Seen at Hand

G.U. Forum Speaker Warns Attorneys of Nearing Drastic Change.

Local attorneys were warned last night at a legal forum conducted at the Georgetown Law School that they might as well be prepared to face "a complete revolution" in the time-honored rules of civil procedure and practice in the Federal courts of the District of Columbia.

"Whether you like the idea or not the change will come," Austin F. Canfield, one of the four forum speakers declared in discussing the proposed new rules now awaiting acceptance by the United States Supreme Court. He characterized them particularly as "a farewell to common law pleading."

While admittedly the new procedure would serve to expedite actions and appeals in accordance with the idea of proposals made to Congress by President Roosevelt, many of the proposed changes brought sharp protests from the speakers.

They were all members of the committee appointed by the Chief Justices of the United States Court of Appeals and the United States District Court in the District of Columbia to advise and report to the committee headed by former Attorney General William D. Mitchell which has drawn up new rules for all Federal courts in the country.

John E. Laskey, former United States attorney, quoted Judge Calvin Chestnut of the United States District Court of Maryland as saying that new rules were not needed to expedite justice in Maryland. "And I think the contemplated changes of rules is not necessary in the District," Laskey added.

Winship Wheatley and Lawrence Koenigsberger were other members of the District committee representing the courts and the Bar Association that outlined the changes to about 200 lawyers who attended the forum session. E. Barrett Prettyman, former corporation counsel, presided.

Civic Theater

"THE FRONT PAGE." The Washington Civic Theater presents the comedy-drama in three acts by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, staged by Day Tuttle, with setting designed and construction supervised by William M. Girvan. At the Wardman Park Theater. Reviewed Wednesday evening by W. A. Whitney.

When a newspaperman admits the authenticity of a newspaper story, it is well worth giving that work, be it on stage or the screen, a second look-see. And journalists have approved "The Front Page," and the Washington Civic Theater last evening in the Wardman Park Theater brought that Hecht-MacArthur work back for that second look-see.

That the "melodramatic farce" was written from life has often been vouchsafed, but between the second and third acts of last evening's performance Director Day Tuttle presented from the stage Charles Schwartz, of the City News Service, the prototype of the character of the same name in the play.

Of the story of how the about-to-be-married Hildy Johnson carried on under the leadership of his hard-boiled managing editor; of how a frightful miscarriage of justice was averted, and of the other miscellaneous episodes, little need be mentioned at this time.

Play of Fast Action.

A play necessitating rapid-fire dialogue, snapped out glibly and without effort, the players were not always happy in the attainment of this end, but, in the larger view, their offering was as smooth and as expertly cast as is locally possible. Director Tuttle did notable work in directing, especially in the latter half of the play when things really start popping.

Charles Barry, as Hildy; Arthur Westover, as the managing editor; Roger D. Washburn, as Kruger, the somnolent reporter; Betty Leaf, as Jennie, the charwoman, were particularly outstanding. Dorothea Lewis, furnishing the rest of the romance; Lois Alexander (pinch-hitting at a moment's notice for Betty Clark), as her mother, and Margery Rice, as Molly, upheld the distaff contingent in somewhat lesser roles.

Others in the company included Fulton Reichlin, Frank Gaunt, Richard Walsh, H. H. Bratsburg, Ralph Hohenstein and Edgar Kloten as other reporters; Lola Boswell, Lawrence Beckerman, Norman Rose, Ralph H. Thayer, Harry A. Westcott, J. Raymond Baine, Mack Dauber, George Cain and William P. Jordan.

STOP!
THE BICARBONATE OF SODA HABIT
If You Have Stomach Trouble Due to Excess Acid Soda May Make It Worse

Bicarbonate of Soda is a wolf in sheep's clothing. You think it's helping you—and it does for the moment. But all the while it is making matters worse. Bicarbonate neutralizes the excess acid that causes heartburn, sassy stomach, belching, sourness, bloating, acid indigestion THEN it starts neutralizing the NORMAL acid content of the stomach. This normal acid content is essential for good digestion. If it's knocked out of balance—made alkaline—your stomach is knocked out, too.

So lay off Bicarbonate. There's a better, safer way to stomach relief—Cal-Trate Tablets. They neutralize ONLY the EXCESS acid that causes the trouble. Then they harmlessly pass out of the system. Be sure you ask for and get Cal-Trate Tablets—they contain no Bicarbonate of Soda and are not a laxative. Sold and recommended by Peoples, and all good druggists. (Adv.)

An 85-year-old Baptist elder stepped snappily up to the altar of the pretentious National Baptist Memorial Church late yesterday and took as his bride a woman of 53.

He is William Arthur Jameson, 127 Park avenue, Mount Vernon, N. Y., and his bride, dressed in blue and blushing pink on both cheeks, was Misss Jane Warren Northrup, of 32 Coliqui avenue, New Rochelle, N. Y.

A former official of the Rogers Silver Co. at Niagara Falls, N. Y., Mr. Jameson knew the Rev. G. G. Johnson, of Washington, when the latter held a pastorate in Buffalo, and came here to be married.

A transcontinental honeymoon ending in California is planned by the newlyweds. But first they stopped for supper in the basement of the church. They plan to leave today for Atlanta, and then will be off to the Coast.

Mr. Jameson is a widower of several years. He became interested in church work early in life, and has been a lay attendant at Baptist conventions for many years, well known for his church work throughout the Eastern United States.

"It was quite a surprise to me," said Dr. Johnson, after the ceremony. "He had sent a couple down here from New York to be married three years ago. Then he wrote me another letter saying a second couple was coming, adding that he was to be the groom."

Military Rites Planned Today For J. C. Moore

Former Navy Paymaster to Be Buried in Arlington; Service at 2 P. M.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. today in Fort Myer Chapel for John C. Moore, 82, former paymaster of the United States Navy, who died Monday in Waynesboro, Pa. Interment will be in Arlington National Cemetery with military honors.

A native of Urbana, Ohio, Mr. Moore entered Navy service in 1872 as a civilian pay clerk aboard the vessel Tallapoosa. Six years later he enlisted and remained in the department almost continuously until his retirement in 1924. He saw many years of sea duty before becoming chief clerk of the office of the Navy auditor.

In 1889, while serving a three-year re-enlistment, he narrowly escaped death when his vessel foundered in a storm off the Samoan Islands. He was washed ashore.

Mr. Moore was a grandson of Thomas Corwin, who served Ohio as Governor and United States Senator and who later became Secretary of the Treasury. His father, the late Dr. William Moore, was at one time connected with the District of Columbia Health Office.

Survivors are a son and two daughters who live here, Wesley Moore, Mrs. Myrtle Broaddus and Mrs. Bernice Cobb; a daughter, Mrs. Jeanette Buckley, of New York, and a sister, Miss Mary Moore, also of New York.

Mellon Gallery Measure Passed By House Group

The House Library Committee yesterday reported favorably and unanimously the joint resolution providing for the construction and maintenance of the National Gallery of Art to house the Andrew W. Mellon collection donated to the United States.

All witnesses at a public hearing indorsed the project. These included Charles Moore, chairman of the Fine Arts Commission, and Frederic A. Delano, chaiman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

John Russell Pope, architect selected by Mellon to design the gallery, said that the building will be one of the finest of its kind in the world. David E. Finley, personal architect of Mellon, said that the art collection is valued at more than $50,000,000.

'Lie' Test Planned For Mrs. Copping

Honolulu, Feb. 17 (AP).—Police today suggested a "lie detector" test for Mrs. Bennett S. Copping, young wife of a naval officer, who reported she was attacked by an unidentified man at her hotel bungalow early Monday while her husband slept.

Police Capt. Don Hays said repeated questioning of principals and examination of the scene had failed to produce "any evidence to prove the charge of criminal attack."

He said Mrs. Copping might be asked tomorrow to submit to the "lie detector" in an effort to learn "details" of her story. Honolulu officials expressed anxiety over the alleged possibility of Congressional criticism because of the reported assault, but Territorial Delegate Sam King said in Washington he doubted there would be anything of the kind.

Full Neutrality Bloc Is Victor On Senate Bill

By the Associated Press.

Except for the demand that American ships carrying goods to belligerents should do so "at their own risk," extreme neutrality advocates yesterday succeeded in incorporating all their proposals for mandatory legislation in the compromise bill worked out at the Senate Foreign Relations Committee meeting.

The provision making it mandatory, after a state of war shall have been found to exist abroad, for belligerents to pay cash in full for all their purchases in this country, was their chief victory. Thus a good half of the extreme "cash and carry" clause they have fought for has become part of the Senate bill. Another of their successes was with a provision making it mandatory that no Americans travel on belligerents' vessels.

While Chairman Pittman of the committee and the other Administration leaders of the Senate were acceding to the neutrality bloc's demands, the Foreign Affairs Committee in the House was taking precisely the opposite course. The House committee finished executive hearings today on the bill introduced by its chairman, Representative Sam D. McReynolds, of Tennessee, which gives the President discretionary power to do all the things the neutrality bloc wants to have made mandatory.

In all probability a vigorous squabble between House and the Senate will be caused by the differences between the two bills.

Senator Bone (Democrat), Washington, proposes to submit an amendment, adding to the bill as reported a clause giving American ships trading into belligerent ports a status something like that of vessels carrying contraband.

Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), New York, strongly opposed even to the discretionary provisions of the House bill, made public a letter from John Bassett Moore, Undersecretary of State under President Wilson, Mr. Moore wrote:

"You are correct in saying that, so far as concerns the proposed surrender by Congress of its exclusive constitutional power to declare war, they for the most part in no respect differ from the measures introduced a year ago to empower the President, in his uncontrolled discretion, to engage in war and carry it on without the prior declaration which our fundamental law requires. * * *

"Not only are such embargoes never contemplated as friendly measures, but they are radically inconsistent with the avowed theory of the present Administration that existing commercial restrictions constitute the chief menace to peace.

"As they are essentially coercive in their nature, experience has shown that they are likely to result in an avowed state of war. As all history shows, wars have for the most part grown out of forcible or coercive acts committed before the legal condition of things called a state of war, formally declared, came into existence. Therefore, to commit to the executive the power in his discretion to adopt and prosecute measures that naturally lead to war, is virtually to transfer to him the power to make war, so that the formal declaration by Congress of the existence of a state of war would become an essentially perfunctory act."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the National Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall Wednesday afternoon; Francis Garzia, conductor; Lazare Saminski, guest conductor; Everett Stevens, piano soloist. Program: "Pueblo: A Moon Epic" (Lazare Saminski), "Deep Forest" (Mabel Daniels), Piano Concerto in F sharp minor (Everett Stevens), "Berkie" Symphony in D minor (R. Deane Shure).

Yesterday's concert by the National Symphony Orchestra held more surprises for the audience than had been foreseen when the program of premieres was announced. Temporarily incapacitated by a painful bursitis of the wrist, Dr. Hans Kindler reluctantly obeyed his physician's advice and delegated the conductor's responsibilities to other hands. Until yesterday morning, when he supervised the final rehearsal, he hoped to be able to direct, but it was deemed inadvisable for him to jeopardize a rapid recovery. Lazare Saminski consented to conduct his own composition, and Francis Garzia took the baton for the remainder of the program.

Despite this disturbing contretemps, the concert proceeded in a manner that reflected credit on the substitute conductors and the orchestra. Thanks to the discipline of the players and their adaptability to circumstances, the audience was not disappointed of the promised premieres of works by Lazare Saminski, Everett Stevens and R. Deane Shure and the first local performance of Mabel Daniels' "Deep Forest." Enthusiastic applause testified to the appreciation extended to all concerned.

Mr. Saminski's "Pueblo" was commissioned last year by the League of Composers and assigned to the National Symphony Orchestra for introduction to the public. The commission plan of the league has been in operation for several years, and this is the first time that Washington has been designated for a first performance. The work was written at the composer's home in Rye, N. Y., during the summer of 1936.

Based on Tribal Themes.

Based on themes of the Ute, Tewa and certain other Amerind groups of the so-called Pueblo tribes, this rhapsody is an essay in the expression of primitive life through the medium of the modern orchestra. The emotional moods are two: discontent with the winter confinement in hogans, and joy in the coming of spring. What is notable in the composition is the restraint with which dynamic resources are used and the adroit employment of instrumental tinbres.

In most cases, composers attempting to expand Amerind music to the dimensions of tone-painting have dulcified and romanticized the material until its essential quality is lost. Mr. Saminski has not made this mistake. His work is stark and almost austere, harmonized economically, devoid of thematic developments, and direct in its statements. The result of this treatment is a remarkably faithful translation of tribal simplicities into the idiom of another culture, without any loss of the elemental urgencies. It is not imitation but transubstantiation of a primitive ethos.

"Deep Forest," by Mabel Daniels, has had sundry hearings in this country and abroad since its completion in 1931. Frankly impressionistic in method, it is an evocation of woodland peace, broken into by fancies of what might have happened there in the strugggle for survival, and left again in its murmuring quietude. Poetic in intention and execution, it represents a mood of musing among towering boles.

While this was the orchestral baptism of the pianoforte concerto by Everett Stevens, the work has been known by some of us in recital performances which awakened anticipations of its full disclosure. It is a brilliant piece of writing, both for the solo instrument and the ensemble. For so young a composer, Mr. Stevens has an admirable grasp of structure, melodic interweaving and harmonic masses.

Youth the Characteristic.

Youth is the characteristic of the concerto, which has a dashing vitality and a compelling poesy. Unlike many of his contemporaries, the composer is not afraid of long melodic lines, and he uses them with skill. His harmonic scheme has pungency without exaggeration. The last movement is particularly scintillant and captivating. In would be strange not to find a reminiscence somewhere in a first concerto, and there is one in the slow movement, which gives a faint echo of Ravel's piano sonatine.

R. Deane Shure's D minor symphony, composed as a memorial for his daughter, is a work which deserves more extended discussion than can be compressed in this review. It is by far the most impressive writing of his that has come to my hearing. The conception of the symphony as stages in a life prematurely ended is carried out with consistency from the berceuse rhythm of the opening movement, through the three-part scherzo of dance forms symbolic of childhood and adolescence, through the poignant funeral march with inexorable beat of tympani, to the exalted transfiguration of the spirit.

The music is intensely felt and projected with sincerity. The scoring is excellent, both in handling of the instrumental choirs and in contrapuntal texture. Certain sections stand out in memory for their adroit adaptation of means to an end, such as the graceful treatment of the minuet in genuine antique mode, the suggestion of sophistication in the waltz, and the almost unendurable implications of tragic loss in the march.

Aid For Sharecroppers.

Farm tenancy is one of the subjects which the Administration has carefully investigated before formulating its policy. In submitting his recommendations to Congress the President follows closely the program outlined by the special committee which recently completed an exhaustive study of conditions that are depressing many thousands of sharecroppers into serfdom. In this respect the Administration's technique is comparable to that through which the social security program was evolved.

As a result of this procedure, there is general agreement that the grave abuses arising out of "unthinking exploitation of our agricultural resources" do not call for hasty legislation bringing new abuses in its train. Rather the President's policy is aimed at long-term improvements that will make the tenancy system less wasteful of human and economic resources. And this cautious program, he says, should be started slowly so that its achievement may be the more sure.

The keynote of the President's message is found in this sentence: "It will be wise to start the permanent program on a scale commensurate with our resources and experience, with the purpose of later expanding the program to a scale commensurate with the magnitude of the problem as rapidly as our experience and resources will permit." If that excellent policy is followed, the proposed aid to sharecroppers will redound to the benefit of the entire country.

Foremost among the impediments to successful operation of the plan will be the tendency for croppers to transfer their dependency from private landlords to the Government instead of acquiring the truly independent status that is sought. The President suggests modest loans "to help the masses of tenants, croppers and farm laborers at the very bottom of the agricultural ladder increase their standards of living, achieve greater security, and begin the upward climb toward land ownership." It is to be remembered continually that this procedure, unless carefully safeguarded, may have precisely the opposite effect by breaking down thrift and responsibility.

From the long-term point of view the most significant parts of the program are likely to be the improvement of education and health standards which are emphasized in the report, and the modification of State tenancy laws so as to encourage rather than penalize sound farming practices on leased land.

Subsidized Silver Kings.

The hearings on the Treasury-Postoffice appropriation bill, published this week, contain some interesting information on the results of the Administration's silver-purchase program.

Because of the great inflow of gold, Secretary Morgenthau reported that the Treasury is making no headway toward increasing the proportion of silver as related to gold monetary stocks. The ratio has remained unchanged at 20 per cent for months, although the Treasury is taking all silver offered at the world-buying price. It is a case of running very hard in order to stand still.

At the time of reporting the Treasury had spent over $1,100,000,000 in buying silver at an average price of about 60 cents an ounce. At present the price ruling for foreign silver is slightly below 45 cents per ounce, as compared with 44 cents when the buying program was initiated. We are, therefore, far from the statutory price of $1.29 per ounce for silver, and equally short of the alternative goal of establishing a 3 to 1 ratio of gold to silver monetary stocks.

The only beneficiaries of this absurd and abortive scheme for restoring the monetary prestige of silver are speculators and subsidized domestic producers of silver. The fact that the Treasury is still paying approximately 78 cents for each ounce of newly-mined domestic silver is reflected in the sharp increase in annual output, formerly around 24,000,000 ounces but currently estimated at 63,000,000 ounces.

Mr. Morgenthau professes not to know how or why this particular price was arrived at, nor even how it compares with domestic production costs of silver. If he would refresh his memory as to the earlier history of the buying program, considerable light would be thrown upon the alleged mystery. The Secretary is now suggesting that the Senate's special silver committee should advise him as to the price they consider it proper to pay for newly-mined domestic silver. Considering the composition of the committee this is like asking a fox how best to safeguard chickens.

Although responsibility for the passage of the silver-purchase legislation rests upon Congress, it would be encouraging if Mr. Morgenthau would take the initiative in urging complete repeal of this measure. It involves a futile dissipation of public funds for the enrichment of a few economic royalists. Just why the American wage earner should be called upon to subsidize silver producers is something President Roosevelt might sometime take a minute to explain.

Sinister Tactics.

Maj. Berry long ago demonstrated his unfitness for the position of industrial co-ordinator to which he was appointed by the President. His partisan activities have utterly disqualified him for the role of an impartial, unprejudiced arbiter of problems demanding a conciliatory attitude on the part of both management and labor.

In view of his record it is more objectionable than surprising that Maj. Berry should now come forward, as head of Labor's Non-Partisan League, in company with two prominent leaders of the C. I. O., to urge support for the President's plan to pack the Supreme Court.

Even if the major were not still a member of the President's official family, he would be laying himself open to severe criticism for the tactics employed to gain support for his labor program. The league in whose name he speaks is, of course, entitled to voice its opinion and try by all legitimate means to further the proposals it favors. That is the right of every organized minority, no matter how small or obscure. But it is a serious matter when any single pressure group organizes to demand fundamental changes merely to further its own selfish ends.

With incredible arrogance the heads of Labor's Non-Partisan League now advocate the reconstitution of the highest court in the land for the sole purpose of securing validation of a labor program embodying their ideas of what such a program ought to be. Maj. Berry's warning that Representatives and Senators may have trouble if they vote the "wrong way" is a very ugly illustration of government by blackmail tactics.

We are witnessing the extraordinary spectacle of an organized pressure group, representing a small minority of the voters, demanding the subordination of the judiciary merely as a means of achieving legislative ends incompatible with existing constitutional limitations. If Congress were to surrender to these sinister tactics, and reconstitute the Supreme Court to purchase immunity from threats like this, the independence of the judiciary would soon be destroyed and the courts would become the pliant tools of any organized minority strong enough to make its lobbying influence effective.

The Supreme Court, asserts the Berry-Lewis-Hillman statement, "has long since lost all real contact with the people of the Nation." It may pertinently be asked since when the court was supposed to interpret popular passions rather than the organic law of the Nation. Those who have really "lost contact" are those who reason that the judiciary must be made amenable to mass pressures. And what they have lost touch with is the fundamental condition of human freedom.

After The Tumult And Shouting

The agreement between the General Motors Corporation and its striking employes is really only a preliminary to the negotiations upon whose success the continued maintenance of industrial peace depends.

The public has followed with intense interest the spectacular story of the conflict—the conduct of the sit-down strikes and the occasional violent demonstrations. It has read eagerly bulletins carrying news of the progress of negotiations between representatives of the company and the automobile workers' union. Yet now that the tumult and shouting are over, it is doubtful whether more than a negligible percentage will maintain interest in the questions before the joint conference which is discussing wages, hours and working conditions in the industry.

Homer Martin, head of the union which called the strike, says that plans are being laid to handle grievances through special tribunals. The seniority rights of employes and cases of discrimination have also been the subject of prolonged debate.

Topics such as these, superficially humdrum and unexciting, are in reality full of dynamite. The unaired grievances and the obscure but oppressive kinds of discrimination to which workers are subjected are more apt to lead to open and violent conflicts than disputes over hours and wages. These are more tangible issues that can be settled by hard and fast contractual agreements.

If the General Motors management and the union can devise plans for dealing with the grievances resulting from unfair preferment and arbitrary demotion and dismissal, they will have gone a long way toward providing a basis for that enduring industrial peace which rests upon mutual confidence.

Rumania Cleans House.

The fury aroused in Rumanian government quarters by the participation of the envoys of four nations in an Iron Guard demonstration last Saturday, has both domestic and international implications of real importance.

For years the Rumanian authorities have been grappling with the threat to internal order embodied in this Fascist movement. Iron Guards were responsible for the murder, three years ago, of Premier Duca. They have carried on an unceasing agitation against the alliance with France, against any and all suggestions of friendly relations with Russia, and against the Jews. It is believed, not without reason, that they have been receiving secret aid from the German Nazis whom they resemble in so many particulars. In addition they have enjoyed the protection of men high in the government itself.

Some months ago they won their greatest triumph when they helped bring about the elimination from the cabinet of Nicholas Titulescu, for years Rumania's foreign minister and her ablest statesman. A strong believer in the French orientation, Titulescu also favored close ties with the other members of the Little Entente, a strong pro-League policy and good relations with Soviet Russia. His elimination, therefore, was rightly interpreted as a victory for Berlin and a defeat for Paris and Moscow.

Since then, however, Rumania has tended to return to its traditional moorings. The link with France has been restored and while the rapprochement with Russia, favored by Titulescu, has temporarily been shelved, Rumania has not moved into the German camp. This has irritated the Iron Guards. They demonstrated their solidarity with the Fascist International when, last Saturday, the bodies of two of their members who had been killed fighting with Gen. Franco were brought home. The occasion provided them with the excuse for a nation-wide demonstration in which the ministers of Germany, Italy, Japan and Portugal participated, as did the former Spanish minister who had resigned his post out of sympathy with the rebels.

The action of the envoys in taking part in what was clearly a political demonstration gave the Rumanian government, prodded by King Carol, an opportunity to hit back at the Iron Guards and also to indicate where it stands diplomatically. Strong protests were sent to Berlin, Rome, Lisbon and Tokyo. The German and Italian envoys have been recalled. Now the Rumanian government is to be purged of Iron Guard sympathizers. Such house cleaning is a sign of strength, not weakness.

No Alternative To Repeal.

For the second time at this session the Senate has voted for outright repeal of the red rider. The House too has condemned this dangerous legislation as it stands. To avoid an impasse that would defeat the will of both houses the "pink rider" amendment attached to the measure by timorous Congressmen must be swept aside.

The issue is now crystal clear. Neither house will tolerate longer a provision which results in the distortion of history and leaves huge gaps in the teaching of political science. The Senate is no less eager than the House to keep the schools of Washington free from any trace of Communist propaganda. But the Senate realizes that the Board of Education can be relied upon to keep out of the curriculum the advocacy of any subversive "ism." It insists that Congress shall not attempt to usurp the function of the local school authorities.

If the House will consider the matter seriously it will be strongly impelled toward a similar conclusion. No responsible citizen would leave the schools of Washington or any other city open even to Communist or Fascist propaganda. The question at issue is simply: What agency shall maintain control over the educational process. If the dictates of common sense are followed that responsibility must be left to the local school authorities.

In this period while the District is struggling for a larger degree of autonomy it would be doubly ironic to have Congress knowingly perpetuate such arbitrary and superfluous restrictions upon the educational system.

Mexico And Spain.

Maurice Halperin in Current History.

What more than anything else makes Mexican reactionaries think twice about following the example of their Spanish brethren, is the popularity of President Cardenas with the great mass of peasants, workers, and even businessmen. Most Mexicans are not only vehement in their expression of sympathy toward the present government, but seem to realize their responsibilities toward it.

One incident brought this to my attention with particular vividness. I was in the city of Vera Cruz when the Magallanes, a loyalist Spanish steamer, was loading rifles and cartridges for the Popular Front government. As I watched the operations from the dock, I was told that the Mexican stevedores were donating their time and labor free of charge to the Spanish government. I was not surprised because the Mexican people had almost instinctively recognized the Spanish rebels as the blood-brothers of their own hacendados and aristocrats.

However, I wanted to make sure and inquired at the headquarters of the stevedores' union. Yes, it was true, the secretary said, and proceeded to inform me how many thousands of pesos this gift represented.

"And what would you do," I asked him, "if the Mexican government were threatened by armed rebellion?"

He smiled confidently. "If we are willing to do this for the Spanish government, which is not our own, you can imagine without my telling you what we would do for President Cardenas."

I'm Gonna Get Drunk, An' Gosh How I Hate It!

What Is Poetry?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of February 12 William Lyon Phelps discusses some verses on Lincoln written by a Washington woman whom he refers to as a poet. The "poem," entitled "Forward March," has, he says, "an ingenious metrical scheme." He also thinks that it "illustrates the art of good declamation;" but how does he know this, since he does not say that he actually heard the poet read it?

The introduction, which is all he quotes, represents Lincoln as a man with whom nature dealt very harshly in perfecting him for his destiny. This certainly is not true. Aside from the fact that he was not physically attractive, Lincoln could have had very little quarrel with Nature. He had a good constitution, developed by his early life as a pioneer. It was the meagerness of his early social and educational advantages that really hampered Lincoln, not Nature.

The verses not only give a false picture of a great man; they are metrically and rhetorically very juvenile, beginning with such childish lines as these:

"When Nature wants to drill a man,
And thrill a man,
And skill a man . . ."

What thrill, may we ask, did Lincoln receive from Nature that had anything to do with his career? And where in English literature can we find so crude an expression as "skill a man?"

The verses as quoted end with these inane lines:

"How she bends but never breaks,
When his good she undertakes . .
How she uses whom she chooses
And with every purpose fuses him,
By every art induces him
To try his splendor out—
Nature knows what she's about."

This would imply that Nature often bends under the strain when she "undertakes" a man's "good"—whatever that may mean. But how could a man be "fused" with a purpose? Fuse means melt. "Infuses" is doubtless what the author intended, though it would go no better with the impossible rhyme "induces." Moreover, who would impute "splendor," meaning brilliancy or luster, to Lincoln? And how can splendor be tried out? Doubtless "Nature knows what she's about;" but can we say as much for the poet. However, a rhyme for "out" was imperative. Hence the line.

Prof. Phelps must have known that the verses he discussed are not poetry. Perhaps he was only indulging in a little harmless irony at her expense.

CHARLES H. PROBERT.

An Unproved Point.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One of the most serious objections to the proposals being bandied about for the revamping of the civil service is that the net results of any change will be to weed out of the service many of those doing perfectly satisfactory work in clerical lines and who are loyal to our Government and to American ideals, and replace them with a younger set, more recently out of school but imbued with ideas in which loyalty to the American Government has no place.

The danger of this is well exemplified by the fact that certain radical groups have been ejected from the American Federation of Government Employes, but are still in the Government service. Loyalty to the service should be the primary qualification of those employed by the Government. Sabotage from within would be our chief danger in the event of war. We should "put none but Americans on guard."

"OLD FASHIONED."
Washington, Feb. 16.

Lost Leaders.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The reason why we have no leaders seems to me to be that the potential leaders were killed, mained, or lost step during the big war.

We hear every hour in every place with emphasis that we have no leaders today and the unfriendly tone would lead one to believe that in some way we're to blame for it.

It is conspicuous that no American nor any native of any country in the great war is a leading singer at the Metropolitan in New York. The leaders are from Denmark, Norway and Sweden. You will remember that these countries were not in the war. The men who might have been great singers were either killed or lost their training while at war and felt too old to go back to school or were pegged down to make a living.

As to the American politicians, the flower of American manhood rushed to the big war and were killed or lost their stride, and in many ways were handicapped and the only excuse we can have now is that the fathers of the younger generations were the seconds left by the war. However, one must think that now and again one might inherit ability from his mother.

C. C. HARRISON.
Washington, Feb. 16.

Reviewer Replies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your correspondent, Mr. Paul Oehser, in taking issue with what he terms my "adverse pronouncements" upon the so-called Dictionary of American English, my review of which appeared in The Post last Sunday, says, "The value of a good many pieces of literary research is certainly questionable . . ."

That is precisely the ground upon which I based my objection to "The American English Dictionary," namely, that, to quote from my review, "its limited scope can hardly be said to have justified the stupendous labor and the 10 years spent in its compilation."

I am not in the least concerned with the "formidable sponsorship" under which the American English Dictionary has been carried forward, nor was I "challenged" by it, as Mr. Oehser states. This is an aspersion which there is nothing in my review to justify. Mr. Oehser does not "attackt" (I cull this word from the American English Dictionary!) my specific arguments, but apparently objects to it only because it is an adverse review, solely on the ground that The American English Dictionary "is being issued under a formidable sponsorship."

The fact that a project is being carried on "under a formidable sponsorship" is not, in itself, sufficient to justify it, however long its completion may require, whether it be 10 weeks or 10 years, or however worthy the scope of the project may be. If it does not fulfill a definite need and a useful purpose, as, in my judgment, the American English Dictionary fails to do, then it is useless.

I should not object to this book if it were called "A Dictionary of Americanisms and Colloquialisms," which, in reality, it is. But the inclusion in what purports to be an American English Dictionary of such words as "assumpsit" and "Adios," is as bad as my inadvertent reference to "anti" as a Latin, instead of a Greek, prefix.

Why is not the word, "alibi," used in its corrupted American—not English—sense to mean "excuse," included in this work? Or why is not "anti-distributionist" included in the five pages of words compounded with this Greek prefix, in company with "anti-assumpionist"? But why, will Mr. Oehser tell us, are not the words "American English" given a place in the six and a half pages of words described as "American" something or other? We might then have a better understanding of what an American English Dictionary is, or should be.

JOSEPH TAUSEK.

The American Co-operative Movement.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his outline of the philosophy and practices of the voluntary co-operatives, founded on Rochdale principles, Dr. James P. Warbasse in his Town Hall address here placed considerable emphasis on the value of competition between "Co-Op" groups and the established capitalist private-profit enterprises. He is an international authority on co-operatives, and as president of the Co-operation League of the U. S. A., deserves an intelligent hearing.

Undoubtedly it came as a shock to some to learn that Dr. Warbasse could so clearly show why the co-operatives have no program to "abolish the capitalist system" as the doctrinaire Socialists and Communists have, but rather favor a program of competition with the capitalist organizations, with no special privileges asked from any quarter. On a basis of competition, without special favors for business from the Government, and equality of taxation, the co-operatives believe they can hold their own, and render the people a superior service.

The value of independent consumer-owned co-operatives is that the powers of self-government are retained by the people. With State, control, it becomes more and more evident, the people lose their privileges as voluntary agents. In co-operatives they not only pool all profit or "overcharge" among themselves, but gain benefits in proportion to their patronage of their own enterprises, in what is known as patronage "dividends." The more the people can do things for themselves the less need is there for Government ownership and supervision; that is the program of the peoples in the Scandinavian states.

Since Dr. Warbasse appeared in Washington the other day, I picked up a copy of the third yearbook of the Co-operative League of the U. S. A., which is published by the Northern States Co-operative League at Minneapolis, Minn., and in the 1936 edition, the doctor has this personal comment to make about his connection with the league:

"In 1919 I retired from surgical practice in order to give all of my time to the co-operative movement. My activities have taken me to Europe many times, to some 22 foreign countries, and into every State in the Union. I have seen the waves of public interest in co-operation come and go, but the movement goes on developing. When the labor movement was interested in co-operation for several years I worked with the labor leaders and spoke before trade unions, State and national labor conventions from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast. When the churches were interested at the close of the World War we gave the churches much attention. Now that the farmers are interested the league addresses itself to their problems.

"These waves of class enthusiasm are not new. The time was when the colleges were not interested in co-operation. We succeeded in breaking through their academic resistance and now they welcome our lectures and courses of instruction which I have given in these institutions. During the past 20 years I have carried the teaching of the Co-operative League into most of the important—and unimportant—colleges from the University of Maine to the University of California, and from the Universities of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota to the Universities of Arizona and New Mexico. There constantly appear in the co-operative field people who got their first knowledge of co-operation in these college contacts. The results of education develop slowly, but they are self-perpetuating and go on without ceasing."

It does not appear to be a healthy situation in society when large corporate and vested interests dominate the entire economic resources of a people, nor does society fare much better when voluntary operations of a people are submerged by "state trusts" which make of every man a puppet of the superstate controlled by an oligarchy.

The Post Impressionist

I'd Tell Her.

THE other day the editor received a letter which he asked me to read. Attached to it was a money order for one dollar for which the correspondent wanted the following ad inserted:

"WANTED: Some kind person to explain why I was born into this world."

The writer stated that she has "black wavy hair, large brown eyes, black lashes, olive complexion, height 5 ft. 6, weight 145 lbs., age 27 years." The letter is signed "An Ambitious Orphanage Girl." It came from a small Virginia town not so far from Washington.

"What would you tell a girl like that?" the Editor asked me.

I'd tell her, first of all, Mr. Editor, that she has just begun to live. Up to now, she has just been going along, getting up in the mornings, performing routine chores, exchanging confidences with other girls just like herself, giggling, dreaming occasionally about a Prince Charming, going to bed at night with the comfortable thought that the next day would bring no revolutionary change in her existence. True, she might have worried a little as she reached 24 and then 25, 26 and 27 and no knight came riding. But that was nothing more than a healthy, instinctive wish to be loved. Now, she's really got something.

I'd tell her that, at long last, she has felt the first pangs of the "divine discontent" without which this world would be no further advanced than the Stone Age. Man grew discontented with going about the world on foot and on animals and he began to wonder why it was that he had to. Out of that wonder eventually sprang long, shining rails reaching to and beyond the horizon. Out of man's discontent with feeble candlelight came sputtering gas jets and then a magic light as unbelievable as Aladdin's lamp.

* * *

I'd tell her to sit down and count up her assets and liabilities. Perhaps she feels that her upbringing in an orphanage in a small Virginia town is a liability. No doubt to her the world seems pretty small, bounded on all four sides by familiar landscapes, unexciting butchers, bakers and candlestick makers. Perhaps she lies awake at night and wonders where that train is going as it shrieks past the little station down the road.

And that's kind of ironic, because there are millions of girls in large cities all over the world who would give anything they possess to know the peace of that rural retreat in the South where she lives.

And she's probably fretting at her youthfulness. She may feel that the world doesn't take her as seriously as it does the graybeards. If I wanted to be facetious, I'd tell her that this is an ailment which only time can cure. But it's hard to be flip about a quality as precious as youth. Surely, even in that small newspaper she sees, there has been something about the President's plea that younger men be placed on the Supreme Bench. Doesn't she realize that there is a premium on youth?

I'd tell her that there are still worlds to conquer, and only those coming along now will live to see or take part in the future victories of man over nature, disease, death. There are still a million books to be written; a million plays to be produced; a million ways in which suffering is yet to be alleviated. And who is going to do it? The men who have already made their mark in the world; the girls who are already tied to a home and family; the city folk who take their smug mode of life for granted? No! It is those who are just bursting their chrysalis and looking around for the first time.

* * * *

It's hard to tell a person to count up their assets without sounding like a Pollyanna. I don't believe in exclaiming triumphantly to a person who has been rendered a lifelong invalid that he can thank his lucky stars he wasn't killed. But when a girl who has her sight, her hearing, her speech and an obvious ability to think begins to feel sorry for herself it is a little sickening. Suppose the seasons were to her only a passage of time on the calendar. Suppose she couldn't see the brightness of Christmas; couldn't hear the patter of spring rains on the window; couldn't make her sorrows and her joys audible by word of mouth. Then she might wonder in the stillness of the night sometimes why she was born. But she has all these faculties and still she uses the greatest of them all—her ability to think—to wonder why she was born.

I'd tell her that perhaps she was born to discover a cure for cancer. Or maybe she was born to paint a picture that men could not look upon without feeling that their burden had been lifted; that color had been brought into their lives.

And I'd congratulate her, Mr. Editor, on her discontent. She's too old now to believe in Santa Claus and fairies. And she's too young to lean heavily on philosophy. So she has got only herself in which to put her faith. And I'd ask her what she is going to do about that, Mr. Editor . . .

Reader Reaction To The Supreme Court Proposal

'I Desire To Go On Record As In Accord'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Whenever a change of any kind is proposed in Government some one starts the cry "Don't distrust the Holy of Holies." Right now this cry is in opposition to distrusting the United States Supreme Court. In 1776 it was "Don't distrust the rule of Great Britain in the Colonies." In 1861 it was "Don't distrust human slavery." In recent years, "Don't distrust the gold standard." And all these things have been distrusted and still the Nation goes on. All down the ages have fixed ideas been distrusted for newer ideas and they in turn have been distrusted.

Our forbears who set up the Constitution of the United States, provided for a Supreme Court of the United States; they also provided the President, with authority to nominate the members of the court and forward such nominations to the United States Senate, which in turn either elected or vetoed the nominee. If it comes to packing the Supreme Court the Senate must be a party to it.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States has set an example of changing the form of its government. At one time the presiding bishop of the church was the one having served the longest period as a bishop. Now the presiding bishop is elected every three years at the general convention. Also this church has provided for election of bishop co-adjutors in dioceses where, by reason of age, infirmity or overwork, the bishop of the diocese is unable to perform all the duties required of him and the co-adjutor bishop relieves him of part of his work. This may prove an admirable example to follow in relieving the work of the United States Supreme Court by appointing vice judges from the lower courts to fill in during the enforced absence of one or more regularly appointed Supreme Court Judges.

Here is another thought along this line. To put this into effect requires no change in the Constitution or legislative act. The President himself has the power to nominate for the Supreme Court judges from among the Circuit and District judges in line for promotion. This is successfully carried out in other departments of the Government. Why not among the judges of our U. S. courts.

THOMAS R. MECHEM.
Arlington, Va., Feb. 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Supreme Court issue is distorted by prejudice and magnified by emotion. Proposals advanced for its reform do not justify expressed fears for the Constitution.

In the first place there is no guarantee a liberal will stay liberal when placed on Supreme Court bench. On the contrary the evidence testifies otherwise.

However, to meet objections and attain the objectives, I would suggest the appointment of delegate or alternate judges, whose duty it would be to prepare digests of cases for the acting judges—thus saving them much time-consuming labor—and to officiate directly when any of the judges become incapacitated or resign.

Under this plan the number of active court members would be left as at present, and new judges would be prepared from overzealous friends than from purported enemies; civil liberties have more to lose through insulated reactionaries than from fanatic liberals.

WALTER SONNBERG.
Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A hue and cry has been raised because the President proposes to rejuvenate the Supreme Court of the United States and to assist the venerable Supreme Court judges in their arduous duties.

The President's proposed action follows the precedent set and the advice given by former Presidents, interferes with or violates in no way or manner the spirit of the Constitution, and is of decided benefit to the Nation as a whole, though, to be sure, perhaps in a lesser degree to the large and powerful corporations.

President Roosevelt is the true and sympathetic friend of the people, of the wage-earner and of the under-privileged.

Nevertheless it is certain that the great majority of the people will, as they did on November 3, 1936, stand by their friend: The President. CHARLES KIENER.
Washington, Feb. 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Has no court hereafter a right to reverse the decision of this court? If not, what right had this court to reverse former decisions? The Supreme Court changes from time to time. Judges die or resign and new judges take their places. Is it not possible, my friends, that future judges may adhere to the precedents of a hundred years ago, instead of adhering to a decision rendered by a majority of one? When did our opponents find that a decision of the Supreme Court was sacred? This decision would not have been rendered but for the fact that the men who had to pay income tax attacked the decision of the Supreme Court and asked this court to overturn a former decision. Every time a lawyer goes into court and asks for a reversal of a decision of the court—and it is not an infrequent thing—he attacks the correctness of the decision which he desires to have reversed."

Who said this? None other than William Jennings Bryan.

Again: "I do not forget the position assumed by some that constitutional questions are to be decided by the Supreme Court, nor do I deny that such decisions must be binding in any case upon the parties to the suit, while they are also entitled to very high respect and consideration in all parallel cases by all other departments of the Government. At the same time the candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the Government on vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by the decisions of the Supreme Court the instant they are made in ordinary litigation between parties in personal action the people have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of the eminent tribunal." /

Who said this? None other than Abraham Lincoln in his Inaugural address.

Certainly no one can impartially and unselfishly disagree with those two eminent statesmen but I rather imagine that if Bryan were living today he would point out that the Supreme Court issue was not as important as a change in the money system which could not be brought to the Supreme Court to test its constitutionality since the Constitution specifically provides that Congress shall have the sole power "to coin money and regulate the value thereof."

Had this been done decades ago there could not have been a depression in the United States and it would not have been necessary in order to avert an internal revolution that Congress would have been called upon to enact legislation such as the NRA, AAA, etc., which the Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional.

WILLIAM J. DWYER.
Washington, Feb. 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why such a hullabaloo about the proposed changes to the Supreme Court by our President?

Everyone admits the Supreme Court to be a good thing, but that fact is no reason that it can't be better. Then, too, if the plan is accepted and works—well and good; if not, Congress and the next administration may reverse it, can't they? The Constitution has been amended and repealed already until it is very much like a sieve.

In my opinion there are many cases not only in the Supreme Court, but in Congress, the States and industry where the 70's might willingly and gladly retire so that the 20's, 30's, etc., might have a chance to work in order to maintain their morale and raise their families in somewhat the fashion of these older gents.

Because of their experience they are like the glue on our postage stamps—hard to pry loose without the pressure of steam under them. We need help now, not after we are gone. BERNICE CARLTON.
Washington, Feb. 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why is it, Mr. Editor, that you and some of those who take the liberty of expressing themselves to you, always start out with the false assumption that it is necessary or desirable to change the Constitution of the United States? And why are we continually reminded, as in this morning's front-page article from the Baltimore Catholic Review, "there are millions of Americans who do not like the way in which President Roosevelt has undertaken to bring about a change."

It may as well be admitted, of course, that the quotation is correct; but along side of the 16,000,000 who definitely expressed themselves as opposed to the President's viewpoint, there were some 26,000,000 who definitely and distinctly favored his viewpoint. The viewpoint, therefore, is not the issue. That little matter was settled in November.

Neither is the Constitution the issue, but nearly always opposition to the President starts with the suggestion that if anything is wrong with the Constitution correct it by amendment. The real point, however, is that the Constitution set up a system of checks and balances; that both checks and balances have worked perfectly so far as the executive and legislative power of the United States are concerned; but they have not worked so far as the judicial power is concerned; therefore, it is necessary to use constitutional means to accomplish what the Constitution, itself, intended should be accomplished.

Why, then, do we avoid the real issue, which is not the usurpation of power by the President, nor the destruction of the judiciary, but the best method of restoring the plan of checks and balances established by the Constitution? It is rather strange reasoning which tells us that, theoretically, the plan is there, but, practically, it cannot be used without remodeling the document that established the plan.

Hitler's Cheers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Everyone who uses his head for something besides just a place to wear his hat should be able to see what the cheers of Hitler and Mussolini meant when they first heard of the Roosevelt demand for control of the Supreme Court.

Of course, dictators don't like the spectacle of a democracy as a going concern—especially the United States—for it might in time put ideas of the same kind in the heads of their own people. They both know the steps leading up to a dictatorship; first, the surrender of the legislative branch to the executive—already done—then, control of the highest court, and the trick is done. You can't fool those babies. They've been through it, you know.

Excerpts

So much has been said with reference to suggestion made by our President pertaining to the Supreme Court that I too desire to go on record as being in full accord with all he proposes. My reasons therefor are recorded in Job, xxxii-9.—C. Y. Custer, Goshen, Va.

What man is there who can honestly say that our Supreme Court decisions have not been partisan? Who can honestly say they have not been narrow-minded? Americans today are awake. Who is there who is not wise enough to know why it has taken so long to adopt the child labor amendment and why it would take longer to adopt amendments for industry, wages and labor? This Nation will survive as long as the wise men of the country drop selfish interests and go the limit in helping Roosevelt promote our general welfare.—O. I. Lessig, Washington.

The fact that the President appoints a jurist to the Supreme Court, and the Senate confirms the appointment, does not infer that the appointment makes the appointee a "supreme being," even though the position endure for life, but does, in fact, leave the justice human enough to err. Having been taught that the biblical age of man is "three score and ten, it is hard to realize that there is any injustice, in asking a U. S. Supreme Court Justice, to retire at the age of 70 years. When a man receives a life-time appointment, there is no inducement for him to keep abreast of the times, since there is no likelihood of promotion, and his position, for the remainder of his life is secure, even though he should stagnate mentally. As for padding the Supreme Court, it is said to have been done before, and since the President feels the need of doing so at this time, why not honor his request? for if it does no good, it certainly cannot do much harm, beside taking six more men off the unemployed list.—C. F. Schaenthaler, Farmingdale, N. J.

Social Control

Reader Argues State, Not Court, Must Determine Principles Of Economic Policy In Twentieth Century.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Continuation of the vociferous outcry against President Roosevelt's mild proposal for Supreme Court reform requires further analysis by the public-spirited citizen.

In an editorial on "Lincoln and Roosevelt" in The Post of February 11, the editor contrasts the language used by these two Presidents. Lincoln is quoted as having said: "As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master." Roosevelt's statement on the eve of re-election is then quoted: "I should like to have it said of my second administration that in it these forces met their master."

The Post misses the implications of these statements. Lincoln rejected a relationship of master and servant. He would not be a master of slaves. Roosevelt affirmed an intention to master the "economic royalists" who had met their "match" in him during his first term. Slaves and economic royalists are poles apart. Mastery over helpless slave labor is one thing. Mastery over the enslaving forces of plutocracy which are enemies of economic democracy is quite another. Both statements reflect the underlying democratic impulse and aims of their authors.

Issue Is Whether State Shall Dominate.

BEHIND PROPOSALS for constitutional reform and the fury of the opposition is a basic issue as yet not noticed in the press comment. That issue is whether control over our economic resources and economic and social policy shall remain in private hands or be transferred to the State. In the simpler economy of an earlier day, when trade was petty and competition comparatively free, the making of economic decisions by the individual business man in an open market is said to have worked out to the general good. But with the coming of large-scale manufacture and industrial integration, with administered competition and inflexible prices, and the concentration of wealth and economic power in relatively few hands, economic decisions now tend to be made in the offices of giant corporations and trade associations rather than by individual enterprisers.

Price leadership, stabilization, and discrimination, market sharing and devices for controlling production and prices are familiar phenomena in the modern industrial world. This transfer of power over industrial policies from individual business men to trade associations, code authorities and powerful corporations may be good for particular industries in the short run, but it is disastrous to the national economy. Its consequences are seen in depressions, unemployment, decline in national wealth and income, and all the attendant economic and social costs.

This situation raises the problem of social control. Adam Smith's "unseen hand" has been supplanted by the half-seen hand of "self-government in industry." We have failed to restore the unseen hand by law.

Legislatures Unable To Determine Policies.

LEGISLATURES, as Arthur Burns points out in "The Decline of Competition," engage in too wide a range of activities to be able to define policy other than in terms of brief general formulae. "They can not participate continually in the interpretation of the formula; they may indirectly and intermittently do so by criticism of policies or by inquiries ventilating criticism of them. They are handicapped because their formulae becomes the playthings of courts distrustful of interpretation by reference to their spirit and intention."

Courts are not well qualified for the tasks of choosing desirable ends or analyzing the means of attaining them, being concerned more with the facts of the past than the needs of the present. Manned in the main by former politicians and corporation lawyers, their habits of thought are so set by long service to corporate interests that conceptions of public interest can only with rare exceptions gain a foothold on the judicial mind. Therefore, it is to the administrative agencies of the state that we must and have turned for the control over economic resources and industrial policy.

We are in the midst of a transition period, agitated by the struggles and conflicts and tensions that inevitably accompany a redistribution of political and economic power. This process, barely begun, of redefining and co-ordinating national policy in many fields (relief, labor, power, transportation, industry, etc.) is being resisted at every turn by corporate interests, intolerant of change and determined not to yield control over policy and resources.

Only the Federal Government is strong enough to cope with them. It is the custodian, defender and spokesman of the public interest. During the past four years, however, administration policies have been largely frustrated by the corporations and courts on grounds of States' rights, due process of law, and other legal technicalities. In its attempt to find national remedies for urgent national problems, the Federal Government has been hamstrung by one of its own branches. It is an amazing, and to foreigners an incredible, spectacle!

Corporations Seen Behind Court Reaction.

THE BETE NOIR behind the scenes of this epic struggle for power is the giant corporation. Engaged for years in exploiting and spying on labor, mulcting the consumer, wasting our natural resources, reducing States with rich deposits to colonial empires, absorbing competitors, corrupting public officials, lobbying legislatures, shadowing government agents, perverting courts, and challenging the sovereignty of the State itself, the giant corporation with certain honorable exceptions has earned the reputation of Public Enemy No. 1.

Through its highly-paid lawyers it has propagated the divine inspiration religion of the Constitution, preaching the doctrine that there is one holy Constitution and that the Supreme Court is its prophet.

Nor is the menace of corporate power a recent problem. Over 70 years ago Abraham Lincoln said: "As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned . . . and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign . . . until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands . . . I feel more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war."

The Constitution should be made for man and not man for the Constitution. It should be interpreted or amended to permit State participation in the exercise of economic power. Control over economic resources and industrial policy should be transferred to the State, and within the State to administrative agencies composed of impartial persons and set up to secure equally effective presentation of the interests of all parties.

Roosevelt Will Not Amend Constitution.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT seems to have rejected the remedy of constitutional amendment. The amending process would take at least two years, barring opposition, since most State legislatures meet only biennially. The delays experienced by the child labor amendment do not encourage this course. By the time a constitutional path could be cleared in this way, his second term would be half over, he might have lost control of the House of Representatives in the mid-term election, and it would be too late to enact a comprehensive legislative program.

In the absence of self-imposed curbs on judicial review by the courts themselves, three external restrictions remained to the President's choice. First, requiring by act of Congress an extraordinary majority of the Court for setting aside a legislative act. This remedy might be outlawed by the Supreme Court as unconstitutional. Second, curtailing the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court by act of Congress so as to exclude cases in which the validity of a congressional act is questioned. This remedy, if constitutional, would leave conflicting decisions in the lower courts unresolved. Third, enlarge the membership of the Court.

This is the alternative the President has come to, presumably by a process of eliminating other alternatives found objectionable for the reasons indicated.

It is to be hoped that President Roosevelt and Congress will not be deterred from his chosen course at this critical hour by the disapproval of Republican State Legislatures or the tirades of economic royalists or the alarm of Liberty League lawyers or the clamor of corporate interests or the prejudices of timid politicians or the fears of the fetish-worshipers or the diatribes of the ignorant. For "it is time," as The Post well says, "for a showdown!"

GEORGE B. GALLOWAY.

'The People Must 'Wake, Defeat This Bill'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Coming at a time when the relations between the executive and judicial branches of our Government were comparatively harmonious, I believe President Roosevelt's recent message to Congress concerning judicial reforms would probably have been accepted in its entirety as a plausible remedy designed by a sincere man solely to relieve the congestion of the Federal dockets. But, on the contrary, coming at a time when the Supreme Court has continually thwarted the Executive by finding its enactments and measures unconstitutional, it might be well to examine carefully any bill proposed by this Executive dealing either wholly or in part with the highest tribunal.

Of course, Mr. Roosevelt may, as he says, only intend to bring about a constructive judicial reform but the fact remains that this reform will place in his hands means with which he may make our highest Federal judiciary entirely amenable to the will of the Executive. In view of the strained relations between the Executive and Judicial bodies, however, it seems unwise that such a bludgeon be given to either the adversaries at this moment.

D. K. SHURTLEFF.
Washington, Feb. 10.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: President Roosevelt, and the rest of the Roosevelts are endeavoring to create the impression that the people at large approve of the policy to pack the Supreme Court because a well-oiled Democratic machine was indorsed at the polls.

If this is Mr. Roosevelt's honest belief why was he discreetly silent, during the campaign, concerning his intention to make the highest court in the land subservient to his wishes, if re-elected? It would hardly require the aid of a Sherlock Holmes to furnish the answer.

E. K. G.
Washington, Feb. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the plans of President Roosevelt to revamp the Supreme Court are sound plans, why be in such indecent haste to impose them that key men have to be subpenaed to the White House to be given the pressure, the smile and the sealed orders?

Claims of present need of radical changes having been proved fatuous, let such reforms take effect two or three years from now, when the country is faced by the horror (if you look at it that way) of a United States running without Roosevelt and the coterie of seers, supermen and brainsters who surround him. HANK BREEN.
Washington, Feb. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Of all the balderdash that ever came over the ether nothing has equalled Attorney General Cumming's speech of last Sunday night over the radio in support of Roosevelt's proposal to pack the Supreme Court. That he is incapable of seeing the moral implications involved in this issue, to say nothing of its threat to the liberties of the people in the destruction of the independence of the judiciary, is not surprising when we recall that he said before a committee of Congress in connection with the bill repudiating the Government's obligation to pay in gold: "The word 'repudiation' does not hurt my feelings. It does not mean much anyway."

The climax was capped when he stated in conclusion of his speech: "The envious and the malicious may challenge the integrity of the President of his motives, but the only apostasy of which he could be guilty would be to break faith with the people who trust him to carry on."

In this connection let us consider for a few lines the question of faith keeping by Mr. Roosevelt, and see how worthy of trust and confidence are his motives and promises. Did he not repudiate the Chicago platform of his party after stating he accepted it 100 per cent?

The Philadelphia platform, which it is alleged he drafted, declared that whatever changes found necessary to meet the changed and changing economic and social conditions would be accomplished by appropriate amendments of the Constitution. And yet he has again broken faith with the people by seeking to pack the Supreme Court to accomplish his ends in spite of constitutional prohibitions.

In all fairness and reasonableness it may be asked, in view of such a record, how anyone can have any faith in any promises or representations Mr. Roosevelt makes.

It is here predicted that his effort to pack the Supreme Court and thereby destroy the independence of the judiciary will meet with failure, and that this attempt, so false to our Constitution and the liberties of the people, will prove to be the bow and arrow that will kill cock robin politically; and that he will go out of office the worst discredited President in the history of the country. Let us take hope and courage from the fact, to quote Mr. Mencken, that "by April 1, 1941, even the Fuhrer himself will be only an ex-President, which is to say, only the molted shell of a man, with none so poor to turn on the dial when he croons. Thus they come and go. There have been some God-awful ones in the endless procession, but we are a tough people, and do not seem to be easily ruined."

A REAL AMERICAN.
Washington, February 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a traveling man subjected to many contacts in the course of each day, I'm finally beginning to note yelps of faint protest from many two-time Roosevelt voters.

The razzle-dazzle with which the masterly Farley and his political henchmen had invested Roosevelt with such telling effect, is beginning, but too belatedly for the good of the country, to tarnish, especially in view of the present hypocritical tampering with the Supreme Court.

I, too, voted for him, thinking a salutary change might astonish the country. But I'm forced now to the conclusion that I committed against myself and my deeper convictions a double betrayal.

GEORGE T. JENKINS.
Washington, February 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: President Roosevelt sniffed at the recent adverse decisions regarding his pet schemes by the Supreme Court. He obviously seeks to revenge himself upon that body with permission of our rubber-stamp Congress to add six additional judges to the court. His idea presumably is that 15 judges will be better able to interpret the Constitution more liberally than nine (liberal in this case meaning in accord with his schemes).

To the mind of this writer the President's action by implication, accuses the Supreme Court justices of being personally prejudiced against him in their recent decisions; that is to say, that their politics had an influence in the matter.

If it is the aim of the President, with the aid of a submissive Congress to make of the Federal Supreme Court merely a rubber stamp in the hands of the Chief Executive and Congress, of what use would such a body be? Would it not be best, in the interest of economy to abolish the court altogether?

On the other hand, if the fundamental law does not permit the kind of liberal interpretations wanted by the Chief Executive or Congress the justices should not be blamed or asked to step down. Their sworn duty is to "hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may." This writer does not regard the Constitution as sacrosanct; if it is outmoded and fails to meet present conditions, the thing to do is to make it more liberal by amendment instead of compelling the justices to misinterpret it.

The question now is, if and when the six additional justices are appointed will they be given to understand what kind of decisions are expected of them? Is not this the obvious inference we may draw?

F. C. LOUKOFF.
Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With regard to the power of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional, section 2, or Article III, provides that

"The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority * * * ."

This would seem to cover the authority of the Supreme Court, to pass on the constitutionality of laws made by Congress, which has never been seriously disputed; and without this authority, there would be no "check" possible by the judicial branch of the Government with regard to any unconstitutional laws which Congress might desire to pass.

A. E. LEWIS,
Washington, Feb. 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A Senator from Wisconsin, in his radio broadcast of February 13 intimated that we are governed by the Supreme Court and not by the laws passed by Congress. Well, I would rather be governed by the Supreme Court, right or wrong, than by a lot of demagogues and spellbinders that are changed every two and six years. No member of the Supreme Court has ever been known to sell his vote. How about that? C. H.
Washington, Feb. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is small wonder that President Roosevelt, in his proposed Government re-organization program, has made provision for six new executive assistants. At present his two undercover agents, former Representative West and son, James, are quite overburdened in their efforts to keep the Congressmen lined up properly in accordance with the Roosevelt wishes.

After the Supreme Court has been brought under the Roosevelt influence, it is quite evident that additional assistants will be required. The question now arises, will Roosevelt draft Supreme Court decisions in the same manner he is now drafting bills to be rubber-stamped by Congress.

Excerpts

The clear intent of Mr. Roosevelt to make the Federal Government, which is himself, dominate the States, is utterly subversive of the form of government established 150 years ago under which the United States has become the greatest nation in the world. The Supreme Court is the last barrier across his path, —Edward C. Potter, Washington.

So the New Deal just cannot play the game and must resort to unsporting methods to gain its aims. The plan of packing the Supreme Court shows that the New Deal just "cannot take it." —Only An American, New York City.

Hands off the Constitution, Mr. Roosevelt. "We, the people" are the United States of America, not a one-man nation self-ordained!—Edward Fuller, Washington.

The people must wake up and do everything in their power to defeat this bill or it will pass. There is no doubt but what there are a number of people who honestly believe that some bills that were declared unconstitutional should be declared constitutional, and there their reason stops.—Edward P. Hubbell, Washington.

If Roosevelt personally wants a change of government, let him come out and say so in so many words, and go to the country with a proposal for amendments to the Constitution that will change the Government over to its own pattern.—Robert M. Gray, Spokane, Wash.

Lying in a sick bed, I am worrying about the President of the United States attempting unconstitutionally to change our form of government by packing the Supreme Court. Less than a month ago he solemnly swore on his old Dutch Bible, so the reporters stated, punctuating his oath with three successive nods of his head, to uphold, protect and preserve the Constitution. If the President harbored such plans as these, why wasn't he honest enough to make them known to the people before his election?

THERE ARE two distinct varieties of splash-man in the ennobling profession of pugilism, and I come back to make this explanation lest it be assumed that many earnest, conscientious round-heels, or pop-overs, are tankers.

The tanker is a gladiator who does business with the manager of his opponent and goes off the springboard for a consideration. The round-heel is one who sincerely strives to win but can't win for losing. He has a weakness, usually in his chin, which becomes known to the profession, and some round-heels have made fortunes out of failure, because the customers, for all that may be said about the manly science of boxing, have a distinct preference for carnage, spectacular falls and conclusive endings. The knockout in pugilism is equivalent to the home run in baseball, and Babe Ruth got as much as $80,000 a year for hitting home runs, whereas the highest salary ever paid a pitcher, whose job is to prevent home runs, was only $30,000.

The splash who went to Baton Rouge, La., to go into the water for Huey Long's boy, Jack Torrance, appears to be a tanker, but hardly a credit to a craft which contributes so much to the prestige of Primo Carnera. He refused to go through with his performance, and if there is anything beautiful in the art of the tankman it is his touching devotion to duty and his resolute ability to hold still when his second pounds on the canvas in the corner and says, "Now!"

IT IS SOMETIMES said that a tanker went into the water from the stunning force of a terrific jab on the wrist or elbow, but that is just loose talk in most cases. An ethical tanker who knows his business and loves his calling will wait for a punch, catch it, roll with it and swoon with convincing realism. Some times he will shut hs eyes and lie there until they drag him to his corner, but the script varies, and he may be allowed to come staggering up just at the count of ten and wabble around the ring with his eyes crossed, begging the referee to let him go on.

Tankers, being human, have been known to err, of course, and there was a dreadful mishap in Los Angeles a couple of years ago when a referee with no sense of humor warned an artist that he would be indicted and sent to prison if he failed to put forth his best efforts. He had already received his instructions and his inducements, and was tossing on the antlers of a rather sharp-horned dilemma, because his manager's opponent was a very ill-tempered man who might meet him somewhere and blow him through with a deadly weapon if he betrayed his trust.

So in the first round he swung viciously, taking care to miss, and during the intermission received a quiet call from the referee, who solemnly reminded him of indictments and jail. In the second round, therefore, the distracted tanker let one fly and knocked his opponent flat and then, without a pause, hopped over the ropes, down the aisle into a taxi and away, still attired in his gladiator's costume.

THE ENGLISH PRODUCED the most gifted high-board heavyweight divers of all in Bombardier Wells and Joe Becket, both British champions, but they were round-heels not tankers. However, it was all the same, because if a performer can be relied on to take his dive, anyway, it does not matter whether he goes in willingly or from sheer force of circumstances.

Fainting Philip Scott, the London fireman, was another successful splash who always seemed to be in earnest, and our own Farmer Lodge, who was Jack Dempsey's sparring partner for some time, belonged to the same group of artists. Farmer Lodge had been a soldier in the war and was said to have been wounded in France, but when it came to real fighting in the ring he was a failure.

Fred Fulton, on the other hand, was a famous fighter with a good record who did water work until reform reared its ugly head in connection with a tank job with one Tony Fuentes, a Mexican. The investigation left no doubt that the splash was on that night.

The true tanker, however, is the better artist, for he often succumbs to an inferior gladiator and generally does so with a subtle yet robust realism which sends the customers, and maybe even the victor, away with the impression that they have been present at a mighty contest and a stirring victory.

Britain's Rearmament.

THE DETAILED statement by the British government of how it proposes to spend the $7,500,000,000 it may devote to rearmament purposes during the next five years has more than an academic interest to Americans. For, in proposing, as they are, to increase the back-breaking burden already being borne by the taxpayers of the United Kingdom, Prime Minister Baldwin and his colleagues are also, indirectly but none the less vitally, touching the pocket nerve of the American people.

The development, in fact, constitutes a perfect lesson in international realities. It shows conclusively how utterly absurd it is to believe that we are or can be isolated.

British rearmament is not directed at us. Of that there can be no doubt. Yet the United States will not be and cannot be indifferent to any action taken by Great Britain in expanding its armaments, particularly its naval armaments.

SINCE THE Washington conference of 1921-1922 the principle of naval parity has obtained as between Great Britain and the United States. That principle has survived the collapse of the Washington and London naval treaties. It was given renewed expression in the London negotiations of 1935-1936 and, by implication, in the naval treaty that emerged from those deliberations.

So far as the Roosevelt Administration is concerned, its spokesmen have stated on more than one occasion that while the United States does not intend to embark on any naval race the principle of parity vis-a-vis Great Britain will be observed. In line with this determination any addition to the British fleet, particularly in capital ships, means parallel construction by this Nation. We are in this respect, therefore, tied to the British chariot as they are tied to ours. For they, too, are determined to see the principle of Anglo-American naval parity maintained.

THUS IT IS that while we may ignore the reasons that have impelled the British to embark on a naval program calling, in the next year, for the construction of three capital ships, presumably of 35,000 tons each, and of seven new cruisers and two aircraft carriers, we cannot ignore this program itself. Our own naval construction program will depend to a very substantial degree on what the British do.

But can we, safely, ignore the reasons back of the British move? Obviously not. For it is these reasons which, whether we like it or not, are now compelling us to expand our naval armaments to keep our Navy the equal of the British.

What, then, are the factors that have caused Great Britain to launch its startling rearmament program? So far as its naval aspect is concerned the immediate background, of course, is the Ethiopian war. Despite a great show of British naval strength in the Mediterranean, Italy went ahead with its conquest of Haile Selassie's kingdom. The ultimate outcome was a serious blow to British prestige. The British have no intention of permitting another such defeat in the future. They plan, therefore, to build up their navy, cost what it may, to a point where it will again be feared and respected as it was feared and respected in the past.

BUT THE Italo-Ethiopian war, in itself, tells only part of the story. The real reason for British rearmament, military as well as naval, is to be found in the growing tensions in Europe arising in no small measure out of the breakdown of collective security. The story is an oft-told one and need not be repeated at this time. The milestones are well known: Japan's successful conquest of Manchuria, Germany's rearmament, the Italo-Ethiopian war, the decay of the League's authority, the feverish efforts of each nation to achieve security through rearmament, etc.

With none of these developments with the one exception of the Manchurian crisis, was the United States directly concerned. Indeed as each succeeding incident seemed to bring war nearer, the unthinking urge for isolation mounted in this country. Its principal manifestation has been the clamor for mandatory neutrality legislation.

Yet all the time, as the consequences of British rearmament are soon to show, we have been inextricably tied to the rest of the world. The very intensity of our desire to be completely neutral in the affairs of the outside world has, by inhibiting us from playing a real part in the campaign for peace, reacted on us in a very unfavorable manner.

It is no mere coincidence, but cause and effect, that as the clamor for mandatory neutrality has grown our armament bill has risen with it.

Bone Supports Wheeler Move for Amendment to Constitution.

can rebuild America on such foundations."

Representative Emanuel Celler, of New York, one of the first ranking Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee to break sharply with the President's program, was called to the White House yesterday, and said afterward he "would be willing to go so far toward packing the court" as two additional justices.

American Federation of Labor approval of the President's program was announced by President William Green, following a meeting of the A. F. of L. executive council. Its action brought Green and President John L. Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, on the same side of one issue for the first time in months. The council last fall voted suspension of Lewis and other members of his insurgent Committee for Industrial Organization. Lewis on Tuesday had joined with Maj. George L. Berry and Sidney Hillman in pledging their Labor's Non-Partisan League to full support of the President's program.

Plans Union Support.

Green announced last night national and international unions, State Federations of Labor and city central bodies, all chartered by the American Federation of Labor, will be called on to back the President's plan and to "acquaint the members of Congress with the desire of labor and labor's friends for favorable action upon the President's recommendations at the earliest possible date."

Green said his council believed "realization of social and economic advancement" could be better promoted through judiciary reorganization, rather than through "the slow, tedious process of a constitutional amendment."

As Senators Wheeler and Bone jointly moved to amend the Constitution to give Congress the chance, with an election intervening, to overrule the Supreme Court by a two-thirds vote, it was reported that Senator Gerald P. Nye, North Dakota Progressive Republican, shortly will announce his opposition to the President's plan.

Would Aid Opponents.

Nye's break would strengthen the prevailing liberal alignment against the President's bill, already swollen by the opposition of Senators Borah, of Idaho; Johnson, of California; Frazier, of North Dakota, and Wheeler, Norris, of Nebraska, another progressive, has termed the plan "dangerous."

While the Wheeler-Bone proposal was not put forward as a "compromise," it was clearly proffered in the hope it might muster support of those Senators seeking an alternative rallying point against the President's bill.

Wheeler said the amendment was so drawn it could be modified by Supreme Court interpretation; that Congress, after the Supreme Court invalidated one of its acts, following a general congressional election could reverse the court's action by a two-thirds vote.

When reporters pointed to Administration objections to the amendment process as too slow, Wheeler said that if one couldn't be ratified quickly after current agitation "then God help Mr. Roosevelt's general program."

Said Bone: "I see no reason why we shouldn't proceed without ascertaining in a thoroughly Democratic and American way the will of the American people respecting specific issues of the gravest import."

The Washington Senator said an intervening congressional election between a Supreme Court invalidation and action by Congress to override it would provide a reasonable "cooling period" during which the people would have an opportunity to decide the issue by voting for men who favor or oppose the legislation. He said the new mechanism would add an additional "check and balance" by the people themselves.

"The amendment offered by Senator Wheeler and myself is a complete answer to the problem raised by thoughtful men who realize the necessity for legitimate and desirable changes in legislation," said Bone. "I have joined in offering the amendment because I sincerely believe that our Government must derive its just powers from the consent of the governed and because I want the American people to become a real part of their Government with as much of a check on that Government as its three branches have on one another."

Both Wheeler and Bone insisted their proposal was not original with them, that Marshall, Madison and "a host of outstanding progressives" have made similar suggestions. Wheeler said it was embodied in the platform of the Progressive Party in 1924, when the Montanan ran as the Vice Presidential candidate on the ticket of the late Senator Robert M. LaFollette, the elder.

Although the amendment was much discussed in the cloakrooms, there was no crystallized sentiment on it. Among those opposing Supreme Court enlargement, Senators Norris and Nye and Senator George, of Georgia, appeared sympathetic toward the Wheeler-Bone plan, while Senators Burke, of Nebraska; Van Nuys, of Indiana, and King, of Utah, took issue with it.

Raising the court issue on the Senate floor, Senator McKellar yesterday declared it "a fight between outworn and outlived reactionary policies of Government and modern policies of real democracy and real freedom."

In taking the floor, he provoked a verbal skirmish with Senator George, when he inadvertently referred to the "world court" instead of the "Supreme Court."

Ripped safety net shown dangling from the Golden Gate Bridge through which 13 steel workers fell when a catwalk gave way and tore through 2,100 feet of the net, made of heavy manila rope. Two men were saved by hanging to the torn rope. It is believed 10 were drowned.

tried to save him but some steel workers dropped him a rope with a loop. He got his leg in it and was pulled up. Then he took the pipe out of his mouth."

The weight of the steel and timber broke the net straight across its more than 60-foot width and ripped it southward 2,100 feet to the south bridge tower.

All witnesses and authorities agreed that the nine missing men had virtually no chance of survival.

The missing were listed as Chris Anderson, William Bass, James Hillen, Terrence Halliman, Charles Linders, Jack Norman, Noel Flowers or Louis Russell, and two unidentified.

Thomas Casey, the thirteenth worker, fell a short distance to a beam bracket, but was pulled back to safety by fellow workers.

Bridge headquarters said the accident would not delay completion of the span, although the directorate announced a week's postponement of the opening from May 21 to May 28 to permit the arrival of naval vessels for the celebration.

The big bridge, now 95 per cent complete, is regarded as an engineering triumph. It has the longest single suspension span in the world —4,200 feet—and was built over treacherous waters that swirl in and out through the picturesque Golden Gate.

The net represented the extreme length to which the builders went to protect construction workers. It was woven of rope at a cost of $82,000, and extended from shore to shore.

Virginia Bridges Need 30 Million

Richmond, Va., Feb. 17 (AP).—The State of Virginia will have to spend approximately $300,000,000 to replace or reconstruct bridges in the highway system that are inadequate to bear the heavy loads of present day truck traffic, Highway Commissioner Henry G. Shirley declared today.

Shirley said a vast majority of the several thousand bridges throughout the State were not designed to bear the heavy loads that cross them daily.

"While we are spending about $1,000,000 per year on bridges," he said, "it will take about 30 years and $30,000,000 before the jog is completed. As matters stand there is the ever-present danger of some of those overtaxed structures collapsing under too heavy loads."

Curtain Falls On Playwright For Modjeska

than anyone else. Yet so cloistered a life did he pursue in his later years that even they were hazy on many points. Mrs. Alden was his friend for many years.

William James Clinton Stuart (his full name), was born in Binghamton, N. Y., on November 25, 1852. He had several brothers and sisters. A sister was once a resident of the Capital. All are now deceased. The closest surviving relative is a nephew, Edwin Stuart, of New York State.

Member of Cincinnati.

The full name of the Governor Clinton of New York who was Mr. Stuart's grandfather and for whom he was named could not be learned immediately, but there seems to be little doubt that it was De Witt Clinton. Holding office from 1817 to 1823, he was the last Empire State Governor of that name.

The first elected Governor of New York was George Clinton, uncle of De Witt, who held office from 1777 to 1795 and 1801 to 1804. The brothers James and George Clinton were officers in the Revolutionary War. Mr. Stuart was a member of the Society of the Cincinnati, whose roll is limited to those who can prove descent from an American officer of the Revolution.

Educated in France, Mr. Stuart returned to this country to launch upon a career as author, playwright and journalist. At one time he was on the staff of the Boston Herald.

His first produced play was "A Woman of the People," a success of the '80's. In 1886 his "Our Society" opened in New York's old Madison Square Garden, starring Annie Russell. It was received enthusiastically. Later came "Renee de Moray," with Clara Morris.

Adapted Play for Modjeska.

In 1900, on the occasion of the visit to the United States of Mme. Modjeska, Polish tragedienne, Mr. Stuart adapted for her use as a starring vehicle a play based on the life of Marie Antoinette. The picture of the actress which hung in his room showed her as Mary, Queen of Scots.

His last drama to be produced bore the then daring title, "Will She Divorce Him?" It starred Cora Fanner. As far as could be learned, none of his plays reached the stage while he lived in Washington, although he is believed to have turned out at least one manuscript.

Just how long he was a resident here is uncertain. "All I know," said Mrs. Kuhn, "is that he was a roomer when I took over the house 15 years ago and he has been here ever since."

On the mantelpiece of his room was an engraved card announcing Mr. Stuart was invited to attend Mrs. Roosevelt's "at home" last January 4. Draped over the foot of his old-fashioned iron bed was a dog harness.

"It was Dora's," explained Mrs. Kuhn. "She died about five years ago and Mr. Stuart never removed it from the bed."

Trunk Overflowing.

Standing against the opposite wall was a sofa, whose scorched covering testified to the almost continuous cigarette smoking of its former user. The open trunk was loaded to overflowing, a hodge-podge of photographs, letters, etc.

The autographed photograph of Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson hanging above the sofa had for company pictures of other famous nineteenth century players, a picture of Mr. Stuart himself as he looked in middle age and numerous others which were not identified.

He probably thought the "old-timers" were the best—the Sotherns, Hampdens, Terrys, Skinners et al.—although he was known to be fond of the contemporary acting of Katharine Cornell and the plays of Eugene O'Neill. He attended the theater often.

"The last show he saw," said Mrs. Kuhn, who nursed Mr. Stuart in his last illness, "was 'Hamlet' with John Gielgud, Saturday a week ago. But there were no seats, so after standing for about 15 minutes he came home."

Funeral services will be held at Hysong's funeral home at 2:30 p. m. today, with burial in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Former Slave Visits the White House

Underwood & Underwood.

William Andrew Johnson, 79, of Knoxville, Tenn., who was a former slave owned by President Andrew Johnson, saw his lifetime ambition fulfilled when he was received by President Roosevelt at the White House yesterday and presented with a fine silver-headed cane. He was then taken for a tour of the city by a Secret Service operative.

Roosevelt Chats With Ex-Slave Of President Andrew Johnson

Throbing days of the reconstruction era following the Civil War were relived in the White House yesterday as President Roosevelt sat in his oval study and chatted for an hour with William Andrew Johnson, former slave of the man who followed Abraham Lincoln in the Presidency.

The former slave, spry despite his 79 years, provided Mr. Roosevelt with his first opportunity to talk with one who had personal knowledge of President Andrew Johnson, and the Chief Executive questioned his visitor in detail about his former master.

William had been brought to Washington from Knoxville, Tenn., his home, after Mr. Roosevelt learned through a newspaper article that he had been disappointed in not getting to meet the President on the latter's visit to Knoxville last year.

Praise to President.

Later, speaking of his host, William said:

"He's my kind of white folks. I'm stuck on him; I always have been stuck on him. I knew the first time I saw his picture that he would make a grand President. He's a fine man.

"He's got ways like Andrew Johnson; he looks like him, see—" and here he displayed an old-time photograph of President Johnson that showed him as a younger man than do the pictures most widely known.

What William told the President was not revealed, but he told newspapermen of his service for President Johnson, on whose farm he was born a slave. William didn't accompany the Johnsons to Washington for their period of residence in the White House. He was a little young then and his mother didn't want to come so far from home. She preferred to live in the home that Andrew Johnson had provided for her.

Tells of Illness.

But when Johnson was returning to Washington in 1875, William was with him as he stopped at the home of a daughter in Carter County, Tenn., some 100 miles this side of Knoxville.

"There," William said, "he was talking with the family, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when he just fell over, from a stroke. I stayed with him for six days and nights, but then he died, on July 31.

"I was only about 18 or 19 years old then, but in those days, you know, boys were just like men."

William is a good pastry cook, working in a restaurant at Knoxville. He was taught to cook by Mrs. Johnson, he said, adding that "I've still got a whole lot of recipes Old Missus used to have. They tell you how to make good cakes and bread and all the other things we had down in Tennessee.

"Why, Missus Johnson, when she was here, would go right into the kitchen to see that things were cooked right. And when she went to Baltimore or New York and would eat in a hotel she'd go into the kitchen to see things were fixed like she wanted them."

Before departing last night for home, William went on the air, declaring "this is the biggest time I've ever had."

It was a gift from the man who had made "the biggest time" in his life possible.

By the Associated Press.

Prescott, Oreg., Feb. 17.—Snatched from the storm-buffeted waters by rescue ships, all 44 crew members of the Italian motorship Feltre were saved today after their vessel collided with an American freighter and sank to the bottom of the Columbia River.

The Feltre, 3,773 tons net, shuddered and settled 15 feet to the river bed shortly after it collided with the freighter Edward Luckenback. The tug Warrior and the little steamer Georgia Burton ventured alongside and rescued the crew, which included a woman nurse.

The 7,943-ton Luckenback tore a great hole in the Feltre's hull and smashed her own bow. She was beached temporarily, but later was pulled off the sand and proceeded 40 miles up the river to Portland.

A heavy rainstorm and a 40-mile wind howled along the Columbia, but river men said the weather may not have been the major cause. Capt. Edward Murphy, master of the Luckenback, stated he was "cross-whistled," but did not explain.

Boston, Feb. 17 (AP).—The steamship Dora, Italian, wirelessed Boston Coast Guard headquarters today for aid. The Dora reported it was having trouble navigating. The steamer, bound for Mediterranean ports from New York, gave her position as approximately 210 miles southeast of Nantucket Lightship. The Dora carried a crew of 20.

Reich Craft in Trouble.

Halifax, Feb. 17 (Canadian Press). East coast radio reported late today it had intercepted a message from the 5,355-ton German steamship Bremerhaven which said she was having "navigation difficulties" in rough weather 320 miles southeast of Nantucket. The ship asked the position of nearby vessels in the event she needed assistance in navigating toward New York.

N. Y. Girl Thug Admits Identity At Family Visit

New York, Feb. 17 (U.P.).—"Norma Parker of New Orleans," alleged toy pistol bandit, became Nellie Gutowski, daughter of an unemployed East Side waiter, yesterday when she finally recognized her family after hours of defiant inattention.

The 21-year-old girl was arrested Monday while holding up a restaurant with a toy pistol, but was arraigned in General Sessions Court on a previous stabbing charge.

She finally broke down in tears, embraced her grandmother, aunt, two uncles, a niece and her father. Her father said she ran away from home when she was 16 and that the family had no news of her until they recognized her picture in a newspaper.

Chang Rights Restored.

Nanking, Feb. 17 (AP).—Restoration of civil rights taken away for his part in the abduction of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek last December was ordered for Marshall Chang Hsuen-Liang today by the Nanking government. The action restores fully the young marshal's eligibility to hold political offices or military commands in China.

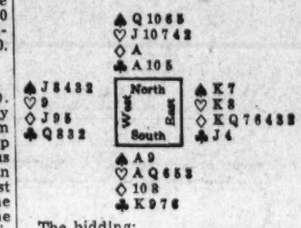
MRS. ELY CULBERTSON ON CONTRACT

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

The hand described today came up in the recent Great Lakes tournament in Chicago, in the pair match. A "top" went to Ralph Kempner and Walter Jacobs, both of Chicago, for fulfilling an extremely optimistic slam contract. Mr. Kempner's play as declarer almost justified his previous enthusiastic bidding.

East, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.



The bidding:

East	South	West	North
2 ◇	2 ♡	Pass	3 ◇
Double	Pass	Pass	3 ♡
Pass	4 ♣	Pass	4 N T
Pass	6 ♡	Pass	Pass
Pass

East-West were using the Vanderbilt System, which explains the opening two diamond bid. In that system a two-bid is often a mild pre-empt of semi-psychic, bid, indicating little more than a long trump suit. Perhaps the very fact that East opened under his system with a two-bid spurred the North-South players to an over-ambitious contract.

The opening lead was the Jack of diamonds, and Mr. Kempner must have been, to put it mildly, a little nervous when he saw his combined resources. Obviously, he might lose a heart, a spade and a club. The heart finesse resolved the first of his worries, but he still had lots of work before him. He took out East's heart King, and then ruffed his remaining diamond in the dummy. He then led the King and Ace of Clubs, giving himself the opportunity to drop the blank Queen-Jack, but when this did not happen there was only one chance left. He led a low spade from the dummy and, when East played small, went up with the Ace, returning the nine-spot. West followed low as did dummy, and East had to win with the King.

Now, since his hand was reduced to nothing but diamonds, he had to lead one of these, which permitted Mr. Kempner to discard the dummy's losing club while he himself ruffed.

Nazi Teachers Scorn Church Board Election

Vote Is Called Affair of Dying Order Fighting for Control.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Feb. 17.—Nazi ideological "teachers," busy schooling the party and the labor front in the idea of Adolf Hitler as a German "son of God," looked with scarcely veiled contempt today on forthcoming elections for the conduct of the Protestant Church.

So far as they were concerned, they indicated, the elections were the affair of "a dying order that is fighting for church control."

Confidential Notes.

But from the department for the ideological training of the future German nation, headed by the Neopaganist Rosenberg, comes each month a confidential letter on instruction in Nazi philosophy. It goes to members of the party and to formations of the labor front.

One of the most recent letters recites that "it is quite human" for Germans to "yearn for a divinely graced personality, a leader who personifies an idea in the struggle between good and bad."

Then the letter hints, without actually saying so, that Adolf Hitler is this "personality." It says:

"We need someone who stands before us in such a manner that we, too, may again become conscious of being children of God. We need a son of God who by his deeds reveals this great consciousness to his brethren."

"Especially Blessed."

"Let no one blame those who believe they have found their God there, where today there stands among us one who has been especially blessed by the Creator. No one has the right to find fault with those of our people who have found their son of God and have thus regained their eternal Father."

How assiduously the Nazi Party is fostering the doctrine of a new revelation of God to the German people through Der Fuehrer may be seen from the fact that the brownshirted "SA" Storm troops) and the blackshirted "SS" (Schutz Staffel guards)—upon whom Hitler relies to carry his ideas into every home and hamlet—will not tolerate either priest or pastor in their midst.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Please don't let me down as you did in your answer to "Montana" on February 8, in which you sanctioned his girl friend's conduct in treating him to scrambled eggs, toast and conversation in her boarding house bedroom. I have read your column long and earnestly and am at an utter loss to understand your pronouncement in this instance. Granting, as "Montana" said, that "nothing is said or done that could offend anyone" on such occasions, still, can one be really sure "when all the world is young" that youth will find "every goose a swan, lad, and every lass a queen?" And will the maiden who admits a casual male acquaintance into her bedroom for scrambled eggs find him, in every instance, a Sir Galahad? If you had a daughter, Mary Haworth, would you give her carte blanche in the matter of seeing men friends in her boarding house bedroom? I trow not.

• • • •

To your suggestion that "Montana's" mother is prudish-minded in objecting to her son's association with the girl who entertains thus, let me add the suggestion that she is also decent-minded, and perfectly right in warning her son to beware of compromising situations. Tell me, Mary Haworth, what must be said in a bedroom that cannot be said in a living room, semi-public though it be?

• • • •

Is this generation so devoid of natural human impulses that it can safely meet in a bedroom and play like babes in a nursery. I mean this question as no indictment of the present edition of the human race, for they are mighty fine considering who reared them, but they are no stronger in resisting temptation than the preceding generation and should not be exposed to unnecessary strain. Make yourself clear, if you please, and don't break my faith in you.

MIDDLEBURG MATRON.

The Power of Thought.

DEAR MIDDLEBURG MATRON: I contend that decency of mind makes for decency of action and decency of atmosphere, whereas polluted thought has just the revesre effect. I contend there is something morbid and decadent in the mind which supposes that a bedroom necessarily constitutes a more irresistible invitation to compromising conduct than does any other comparatively private retreat from public gaze. I contend that both you and "Montana's" mother have done more to inject potential harm into this situation than can be readily excused.

• • • •

"Evil to him who evil thinketh," you know, and the fact that "Montana" cheerfully, and with real credit to himself, thought nothing of the set-up other than that he "really enjoyed visiting in this way," is proved by the fact that he "made casual mention of these visits" to his mother while home for the Christmas holidays. His mother, as you suggest, is justified in warning her son to beware of compromising situations—where such situations actually exist—but she also has the moral obligation to refrain from planting in his mind any ideas which may blossom into Dead Sea fruit. The same obligation applies to any enlightened elder who concerns himself with preserving the moral and social integrity of the young.

• • • •

You ask: "What must be said in a bedroom that cannot be said in a living room, semipublic though it be?" Either you have no sympathetic understanding of the delicate nuances of boy-and-girl relationships, or you are resorting to pure sophistry in an attempt to make a point. Why is it that common-sense parents who aspire to see their adolescent sons and daughters through the shallows of their romancing years into the safe harbor of secure social relationships unanimously concede them undisputed rights to the living room, or library or play room on evenings when their friends are calling? Is it because the children have unhallowed things to say to each other which may not fall on parental ears? Certainly not. It is because youngsters must be made to feel at ease if they are to achieve a casual and natural social interchange with their contemporaries. What is the result when two young persons, both rather shy and lonely, are forced to attempt, in a semipublic place, mutually exploratory conversation before a changing audience of amused, speculative, disdainful or even indifferent onlookers and listeners? Either they lapse into speech paralysis, or into an artificially strained and formal utterance which leaves them greater strangers than before.

• • • •

I take it that "Montana's" girl friend, by transferring the stage setting of her hospitality from the boarding house parlor to her own room, was acting on the age-old impulse to retreat a little with her beau from the collective family gaze. Homeless indeed is the boy or girl who has no room apart in which to receive a friend: In scrambling eggs and making toast over which to have conversation, she automatically and probably subconsciously transformed the hall bedroom—in her mind and the boy's mind—into the old-fashioned family kitchen or new-fangled kitchenette, where youth is wont to retreat at the end of an evening.

• • • •

If I had a daughter of beauing age who must call a boarding house bedroom home, and she had the cheery resourcefulness to entertain her friends there with occasional chafing dish parties, I would deem it far wiser to feed her imagination on the infinite variety of interesting things that can be done with eggs and toast and a spirit lamp than I would to dwell on the possibility of bogeymen under the bed. "Montana's" mother would probably have done better to have sent his girl a collapsible mixing bowl and a book of recipes, instead of sending him back to her with a sense of distrust that may one day turn to dangerous curiosity.

Too Many 'No's' Make Children Recalcitrant

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

THE LESS one says "No" to a baby the better. Saying "No" becomes a habit because it is so easy. Tommy goes near the bookcase: "No, Tommy." He starts to climb the stairs—"No, Tommy"—or to pull things off the table, and again comes the inevitable "no." Eventually he feels encircled by a wall of prohibitions, and if he is a normal child, disobeys them all.

The family should decide in the beginning just what should be definitely forbidden and then should never say "no" to any other acts. Stairs are dangerous, and until he knows how to go up and down alone, must be forbidden. Hammering on windows, going near the stove or the fire also might be considered "no" behavior. Each household must work out its own rules, but they should be as few as possible.

A tiny child who is still in the experimental stage should not be permitted to wander about a room cluttered with objects which he must not touch. Quite naturally he is tempted to pick up vases and then throw them down, to pull at hanging objects and perhaps drag table cloth and all that is on it down in a heap.

He is not being bad, any more than is the scientist who blows up his laboratory in the attempt at a new discovery.

Several Hues Best For Pearl Strands

Pearls, the perennial favorite, take to three, four or five twisted strands for neck or wrist, and the newest thing is to have each strand in a slightly different color. Among these new shades are French beige, cocoa tan and platinum. Another new wrinkle is to keep your jeweled bug, rhinestone orchid or other pet ornament in a tiny box of plastacele, a cellulose acetate plastic, which wards off dust and prevents accidental scratching or chipping.

Simple Dress Urged for Day, Night Glamour

Eve Symington Gives Bit of Advice to Women in Business.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

"DRESS SIMPLY by day and go glamorous at night—in other words, change your personality."

This pertinent bit of advice for the business woman, given by Eve Symington (Mrs. W. Stuart Symington), of New York, who is in Washington visiting her parents, Representative and Mrs. James Wadsworth, is not only practical, but expresses Mrs. Symington's paradoxical temperament. Starting in as a 'blues' singer several seasons ago, when it suddenly became the vogue for feminine social registerites to have careers, Mrs. Symington, who sings nightly in the Sert Room at the Waldorf-Astoria, is one of the very few who continued working. At first it was just for fun, but now it is definitely a business, and she is one of the highest paid entertainers in New York.

Mrs. Symington is utterly unorthodox about everything she does and equally emigmatic about her wardrobe. Even though Parisian and American designers decree black, the smartest color any woman can wear, this noted singer, emphatically states, it is not smart unless it is becoming, and to a large number of women it is decidedly unbecoming.

Again, though all the world talks accessories — she never wears them. Her evening clothes stress glamorous simplicity; for daytime, she dresses almost exclusively in mannish tailored suits, worn with blouses of the shirt type, in contrasting color. Fur neck pieces, muffs, scarfs, and the like, are never included in an ensemble; "I loathe wearing things I have to keep track of," she exclaimed, "I always lose them." Flowers, she maintains, are to carry or place in vases about the room, never to adorn yourself with.

Likes Crazy Hats.

"I like conservative clothes; no bouffancy, trimming which is not definitely part of the costume, or costume jewelry," Mrs. Symington volunteered, "but I simply run wild when it comes to hats. The crazier they are, the better I like them. Because I always seem to have so much stuffed in my daytime handbags, I prefer one that is large and roomy and definitely without monograms—I dislike initials on anything. For evening, the small formal bag of glittering paillettes, which is the only accessory I use, is the inevitable choice." Because of Mrs. Symington's blond coloring one would assume that blue would be a favorite color— but she never wears it—black, silver, gold, white, pink and certain shades of yellow, comprise her color chart.

When asked about a domestic touch for the interview, Mrs. Symington boldly stated that while she could cook, she didn't like to and consequently never did. "Instead of spending a lot of time planning diets and counting calories, I prefer to take a glass of milk and be done with it," she said.

Defying the precedence set by by singers that exercise is a necessity, she frankly sidesteps all exercise, except long walks—"exercises are too tiring." Deep-sea fishing, for which she dresses in old slacks and shirts, is Mrs. Symington's chief recreation, and she advises all who sneer at the sport that she really catches sail fish, too. She drives her own car as well as planning her own programs for her singing engagements at the Waldorf; modern songs please her and fit in with her lovely husky contralto voice.

How can a woman put her personality across, either professionally or in the social world—or even in a prosaic business position? The answer to this important question, according to Mrs. Symington, who is noted for a charming personality, is: "Don't try so hard that it is obvious. Be natural and above all, be considerate and seem interested in the other persons with whom you are talking."

Bridge players will never have to fear Mrs. Symington as a tricky opponent—she doesn't even know how to play the game, and never expects to learn. A good book is much more entertaining and beneficial, she maintains, than a game of bridge, and much more relaxing—but again deviating from generalities, she doesn't read detective stories, or books classified as "summer reading."

Besides Mrs. Symington's career and numerous social engagements, she is the mother of two sons—Stuart, 11, and James Wadsworth, 9. At 32, she looks more like a post-debutante, than a young matron with a family and a busy career.

'Be Yourself,' Advises Singer

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Medical Progress.

IN ANSWER to the question what discovery or invention during the last year or two has been of the greatest importance to medicine, Dr. Otto Leyton, physician to the London Hospital, selected these:

"1. That the ratio of the different types of cells in the anterior lobe of the pituitary gland can be modified by the administration of different substances and the removal of certain glands.

"2. That the common cold, influenza and rheumatic fever are of virus origin, and that a virus can be cultured and probably an immunity produced.

"3. That some of the sex hormones are of a comparatively simple chemical structure, and may be synthesized from cholesterol."

As to what he considered the most important drug or method of treatment introduced within the last few years, Dr. Leyton said:

Most Important Drug.

"My interpretation of the past few years makes me exclude the method of improving the blood circulation to a limb by the application, alternately, of diminished and increased atmospheric pressure, which is accomplished so successfully with Herrmann's Pavaex apparatus, and others of similar construction.

"The most important therapeutic substance introduced during the past year or two is, in my opinion, testosterone propionate (Perandren). I make this selection, even after having seen patients suffering from myasthenia gravis transferred from purgatory to paradise by swallowing, at intervals of five or six hours, 15-milligram tablets of Prostigmin, because, fortunately, the victims of that fell disease are very limited in number and therefore Prostigmin can benefit only a very small proportion of mankind.

"Testosterone propionate and estrone dihydroxy benzoate prove that man can combine substances and produce agents of greater pontency that those which occur in nature. I doubt whether this new preparation will fulfill the dreams of Brown Sequard and rejuvenate, or even prevent, the devastating effect of time upon the majority of the tissues of men. It seems probable, however, that it may delay hypertrophy of the prostate gland, even if it fails to cause atrophy. As an aphrodisiac it is unlikely to have any action other than that produced by suggestion. It may, however, supply the aged with mental energy and change the 'seventh age of man.'"

Dr. Leyton Enthusiastic.

This statement must be taken with some latitude by the American interested in medical matters, because these drugs are all in the experimental stage. I know of no American clinic which takes quite so rosy a view of Perandren, also known in the United States as Oreton and Androsterone, as that which Dr. Layton expresses.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a 3-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Everyday Etiquette

WHENEVER you're with other people your manners are on display. Do they reveal you as a gracious, charming person?

Or do little slips like buttering and biting into a whole piece of bread make you seem pathetically awkward?

No one cares a straw if you butter a small hot biscuit all at once — on your plate, not in the air. But please, if you want a Grade A rating in charm, break bread or rolls into small morsels and butter a bite or two at a time.

On a crowded dance floor, in a packed bus or elevator do you jostle against a fellow sardine? Don't ignore your blunder, or fall all over yourself apologizing, or mutter "Beg pardon," or "Pardon Me." It's enough to say once, as if you mean it, "I beg your pardon" or "I'm sorry."

Cherry Week Recipes Bring Newest Dishes

Fruit Has High Food Value and Is More Than Mere Decoration.

By Rebekah Blake.

National Cherry Week which began Monday, brings to mind the many uses for this verastile fruit. While most housewives use cherries on frequent occasions to garnish salads, desserts and iced drinks, or to make pies and pastry, this fruit is too often considered merely as a decoration. Cherries have a high food value and are accepted as good sources of vitamins A and C. This is of particular interest to the woman who is seeking new dishes that are not merely appetizing, but will also contribute toward a healthful diet.

Cherries are obtainable in a number of varieties and may be served in any number of ways. Cherry pies and tarts are always welcomed by the family, sweet or sour cherries served alone or with other fruits make a tempting dessert, and cherry juice, which may be easily prepared, is an excellent appetizer, or may be used for flavoring or as a base for iced drinks.

Both sweet and sour cherries may be purchased in canned form.

The Maraschino type of cherry was an imported fruit, but in recent years it has become a domestic product.

Cherry Shortcake.

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon sugar
1-3 cup butter
¾ cup milk
4 cups cherries (drained and pitted)
Cream

Combine dry ingredients, work in butter with fingertips, and add milk gradually. Toss on floured board and divide into two parts. Roll out and bake in two layer cake pans in hot oven, 400 degrees Fahrenheit, about 12 minutes. When cool, spread cherries on both layers and combine. Serve with plain cream, or sweetened whipped cream.

Cherry Parfait.

1½ cups cream
¼ cup powdered sugar
½ cup blanched almonds (roasted and chopped)
1 teaspoon vanilla

Drain and pit cherries. Whip cream, fold in sugar, almonds, and vanilla. Combine with cherries, fill parfait glasses, and chill.

Cherry Salad.

1 can large red or white cherries
Chopped nuts
French dressing
Lettuce

Drain and pit cherries, and fill with chopped nuts. Marinate in French dressing. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves with additional French dressing.

Cherry Pudding.

2 cups hot milk
1 cup bread crumbs
Salt
1½ tablespoons butter
2 eggs, beaten slightly
¾ cup sugar
2 cups cherries, drained and pitted

Pour hot milk over crumbs and add a few grains of salt. When cool, combine with remaining ingredients, pour into a buttered baking dish, and bake in a moderate oven, 375 degrees Fahrenheit, until set.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Feb. 17.

YESTERDAY was a faintly pink, if not indeed a red-letter day for the unfettered males of the town, for it saw the opening of the first free cooking school for bachelors. The interesting institution is part of the local eating house called The Roger Smith.

ALICE HUGHES.

Fascinated by the notion and the prospectus, I rushed madly off to sound out the faculty on the aims, problems and hopes of The Free Cooking School for Bachelors. This consists of three gentlemen—Mr. Rudy Sidler, the manager; Signor Gildo Galli, the maestro in the high white hat, and Mr. Friendman, the press agent who founded the school. I approached Prof. Friendman, who is, I believe, Vice Dean of Men and Associate Professor of Egg Boiling and Bread Slicing.

"Naturally," said the professor, "we don't want to chase men away from restaurants. What he wanted to do is to teach bachelors to appreciate good food and to prepare tasty breakfasts and midnight snacks. Luncheons and dinners they should eat in restaurants—like ours, say."

"Very nice," I said, "but what is going to happen when the bachelor finally gives in to matrimony and is found, by the girl bride, messing around in her kitchen?"

"We are going to tell them, emphatically, that they should stay out of the kitchen when they marry," answered the professor firmly. "This is not a school to teach young husbands how to make breakfasts to bring to their wives in bed!" With this stern male pronouncement, I made my adieux. I didn't see any students, but the faculty were all on hand, eagerly looking for bachelors to teach how to run up a smidgin of unburned toast!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—We have just passed through National Rice Week without the sign of a struggle—though I did hear that some 300 recipes are now on tap for the Chinese Staff of Life. But I suppose, no matter how thin you slice it, it's still rice pudding . . .

• • • •

I am still somewhat unstrung from the spectacle of Dr. Gerald Wendt lecturing away before our earnest Tudor City Forum while wearing a glass suit and necktie. The Doctor was telling the assembled Tudor citizens of the wonders of the modern laboratory, and making them evident by his odd but interesting apparel. Such raiment would never do for one of the lads who is a chronic faller-downer. Or perhaps they make shatterproof coats and pants for men of that ilk . . .

• • • •

Word comes from Palm Beach that our pet mimic, Sheila Barrett, has been going like a breeze down under the palms. She recently entertained at a huge party given by the Hugh Dillmans at Palm Beach and got her name mentioned in the local papers before any of the fancy guests. She's working at Miami Beach, too, and doing mighty well. Sheila's in the $1,000-a-week class now . . .

Dropping into the lobby of the Madison Hotel the other evening, I caught a flash of some familiar dark beauty, and it was Mrs. Eugene O'Neill, wife of our leading playwright.

New French Envoy and Mme. Bonnet Arrive With Youthful Son; Alaine, and New Aides

Second Secretary's Wife Will Be the Capital's Youngest Hostess.

Mme. Charpentier Was Married 6 Months Ago; Father Is Diplomat.

By Dudley Harmon.

Welcomed by members of the French Embassy, the new Paris Ambassador and Mme. Georges Bonnet arrived in Washington yesterday afternoon. They were accompanied by their curly headed son, Alain, and 27 pieces of luggage.

Smartly gowned in a brown wool dress with a matching coat of beaver and a sailor hat with a veil, Mme. Bonnet did most of the talking for the Ambassador, who speaks English less fluently than his wife. This is her first visit to America. She studied English for several years in Paris and speaks it well. A decided brunette, she is tall for a Frenchwoman.

Mme. Likes America.

Mme. Bonnet has decided since landing in New York yesterday morning that she likes America. "There's a certain excitement in the air," she said, "which is very stimulating." A rough crossing and a storm their last night at sea did not dim her enthusiasm.

"Americans arriving in Paris are always expected to comment on the chic appearance of French women," she said yesterday. "But I think this should be reversed. Americans are so well dressed that in Paris restaurants when one asks, 'who is that pretty woman?' it invariably turns out to be someone from your country."

Three-year-old Alain Bonnet speaks no English, but Mme. Bonnet is thinking of having an American nurse for him. Yesterday he wore a pale blue wool suit and no hat. He was surrounded by a small corps of maids and nurses.

Attaches Also Arrive.

The Ambassador and Mme. Bonnet were accompanied by the new Second Secretary of Embassy and Mme. Paul Charpentier and by the First Secretary, Roger Gaucheron, and his sister, Mlle. Simone Gaucheron, who also docked on the Ile de France.

Mme. Charpentier will be the Capital's youngest diplomatic hostess. Only 18 years old, she was married six months ago. Her father was formerly French Ambassador to Moscow and is now Minister to Switzerland, so Mme. de Charpentier has had training in the art of diplomatic entertaining.

M. Jules Henry, Counselor of the Embassy, accompanied the Ambassador and Mme. Bonnet from New York, and yesterday introduced members of the staff to the envoy on the station platform. Those from the embassy included the Naval Attache and Mme. Sable, the Military Attache and Mme. Lombard, the latter wearing a brown cloth coat with a fox collar and a small gray wool turban; the Attache and Mme. Lucet, the latter in a beaver coat and off-the-face felt hat; the Air Attache and Mme. Champsaur, and the Third Secretary and Mme. Saint, who wore a black coat trimmed with Persian lamb and a small turban trimmed with the same fur.

Commissioned List of Visiting Submarine Entertained.

A luncheon, given at the Mayflower by the director of Naval Intelligence, Capt. W. D. Puleston, and a tea at which Commander Wallace Lind, U. S. N., and Mrs. Lind entertained at their apartment in the Kennedy-Warren yesterday afternoon were among the functions held in honor of officers of the Dutch submarine O-16, which arrived in Washington Monday.

Gen. von Boetticher was not there with Frau von Boetticher, as both he and the Naval Attache of the German Embassy, Rear Admiral Robert Witthoeft-Emden, are out of town.

The apartment was bright with bouquets of spring flowers, tulips predominating. A large bowl of red tulips was the centerpiece for the buffet table in the dining room.

Among the guests present, in addition to those from the Diplomatic Corps, were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Thomas C. Hart, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Henry H. THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

When the next person tells you that you may have as much gold as you can carry, don't think he is exaggerating or giving you a marvelous gift, because — and thereby hangs a tale. The other day Jeffy O'Connor went to Philadelphia on a visit and paid a call on the Mint in that city. While going through the various well-stocked vaults he thought he would try to hold as much gold as possible, and found to his amazement, the amount was just two gold bricks (that was quite enough for him or anyone else to lift) and that the value was only $28,000. So now you see that whoever started the idea of taking as much as you can carry evidently knew what he was talking about.

Another change in diplomatic-dom—but this time a change in name or rather title only, thank goodness. Yesterday the young King of Egypt conferred upon his Minister here, the amiable Mohamed Amine Youssef, the grade of Bey, of the First Order. And so, he is now His Excellency, Mr. Mohamed Amine Youssef Bey.

Tonight the members of the staff of his legation are honoring him with a buffet supper for 150. You might guess that Anis Azer had more than a little to do with the promoting and actual planning of the party, and we heard from our very best source that he had made all of the necessary arrangements, invited the people and received their answers all within seven hours. That really sets a record for speed, and we would be willing to wager that the fastest worker in speedy New York could not touch it.

Mrs. Julian Manger has a very lively debutante daughter, Isabel usually makes the trip between here and her mother's former home in Louisville, Ky., by air, thus making her stay at either end a bit longer. She was right in the midst of the recent excitement there and had to be rescued from an apartment, carried out to a boat and taken to the home of an aunt, on higher ground.

Mrs. Manger was one of the guests at the prettily appointed luncheon which Helen Ray Hagner gave yesterday for some of her newspaper women friends. The long table was most effectively decorated with lovely Holland tulips—huge white and red ones. On either side of the long oval centerpiece were smaller ones of the same bright posies. At each place were cunning little dogs and pencils, connected with silken leashes—as souvenirs.

Florence Cauthen, who is now a boarding pupil at Holton Arms, since her aunt, Dorothy Lee Ward, deserted chilly Washington for warm Florida, occasionally takes time out from her studies. Ran into her the other afternoon when she and a classmate popped into that favorite haunt of the Holton girls, where milkshakes are as thick as velvet and as smooth as silk.

Florence had on a smart double-breasted coat of camel's hair with a wide lapel collar of beaver. Her tiny brown felt hat had the merest suggestion of a brim, just enough to keep the snow out of her eyes.

By Lynda Reeve

The Commercial Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell were hosts at a party yesterday afternoon in their apartment on Massachusetts avenue. It was given in honor of their daughter, Mrs. Richard Eglinton, who recently arrived in Washington.

Senora de Campbell wore a gown of aquamarine and silver brocade. Her daughter, who prefers to be called "Mrs. Eglinton" while in this country instead of Senora Lily Campbell de Eglinton, as her calling card is engraved, had on a becoming white crepe frock printed with bouquets in pastel shades.

Although the apartment is a spacious one, it is a small home compared to those in Senora de Campbell's native Chile where they all have many rooms and are surrounded by lovely gardens, she told one of the guests.

Among the first to arrive were Mrs. Thomas C. Dawson, wearing maroon crepe with a diamond brooch at the neck and a small black hat; Mr. and Mrs. Guy d'Aulby, the latter in two shades of blue; Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor, the Comptroller of the Currency; Baroness von Below, in black with a turban of black velvet and gunmetal brocade; the Air Attache of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Puga, the latter in black with a touch of white at the throat, and with them Senora de Castro, wife of the Minister of El Salvador, who was attired in spring green ribbed crepe made with braided ornaments on the shoulders.

The former President of Panama, Dr. Ricardo Alfaro, was accompanied by Senora de Alfaro, who was costumed in dark blue with a gray felt hat. The Minister of Panama and Senora de Boyd, the latter in bright royal blue with a medium brimmed hat of black velour, had with them their young daughter, Senorita Dora Boyd, slender brown-eyed girl, who wore a brown crepe skirt, emerald green tunic and pointed crowned hat of cocoa felt. The Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco was accompanied by his son and daughter, Senor Manuel, jr., and Senorita Marta Trucco, who was smartly costumed in all black, her hat of the flat "pill box" model. Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister, wore black with a silver fox cape.

The "dean" of the Ecuadorian Boundary Commission, Dr. Homero Viteri, and Senora de Viteri, were among those seen in the drawing room. She was attired in mahogany brown, trimmed with dark brown fox.

In a group chatting on a sofa were Senora de Busk-Codas, wife of the Minister of Paraguay, who wore brown satin, printed in a dainty floral design, and a wide brimmed brown straw hat; Senora de Castro-Beeche, wife of the Minister of Costa Rica, in black with beading of turquoise on the belt and at the neck, and Senorita Eloisa Jimenez, of New York City, guest of Senora de Castro-Beeche, who had on black with tassels of black and green at the waist and throat.

Others at the party were the Cuban Ambassador, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson y de Jauregui, his lovely blonde daughter, Senorita Olga Patterson, and his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schlatter of the Swiss Legation; Senora de Castillo Najera, wife of the Mexican Ambassador; Mme. Bueno do Prado; Senora de Huneeus; Senor Don Hector Diaz Leguizamon, first secretary of the Argentine Embassy; the Ecuadorian Ambassador, Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro; Mrs. Clarence Grosner, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, Senor Don Fernando Illanes, of the Chilean Embassy, and the Minister of Uruguay, Senor Jose Richling.

The Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

The former United States Minister to Belgium and Mrs. Theodore Marburg had a number of interesting Washingtonians at their dinner in Baltimore on Tuesday which was in honor of Prince and Princess Bourhanneddin, friends of long standing they met during their European travels.

Among their guests were Prince Osman Ertougroul of Turkey who has been visiting in Washington and former Spanish minister to France, Don Salvador de Madariaga.

The dean-elect of Washington Cathedral, the Rev. Dr. Noble Powell, rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, was in Washington yesterday on business connected with his appointment and was presented at an informal gathering to the staff of the Cathedral held by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington. It was announced that Dean-elect and Mrs. Powell will attend the Fellowship dinner of the Washington Cathedral staff to be given April 1.

Dr. Powell will serve also as Warden of the College of Preachers, Washington Cathedral, with which he has been associated as student, adviser and teacher for about 10 years.

Dr. Powell has an interesting family and his wife has been a leader in church and civic activities in Baltimore. She was Miss Mary Wilkins Rustin of Charlottesville, Va., and was married to Dr. Powell in 1924 when he was rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church in that city and was chaplain for the Episcopal Students in the University of Virginia.

Their two sons, aged 4 and 8 years, respectively, are Philip Noble Powell and Thomas Hooker Powell. Mrs. Powell's ancestors were from New England, her family having lived for many generations in Massachusetts and Connecticut. She is a member of the Junior League, the Colonial Dames, Daughters of the American Revolution and of the Women's Board of the Hospital for Crippled Children in Baltimore.

The Powells have a camp in the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia, the doctor being an enthusiastic mountain climber, camper and woodsman although they pass part of each summer at Rye Beach, N. H., where Dr. Powell ministers to the summer colony of St. Andrew's-by-the-Sea.

Miss Anne Chilton, daughter of the British Ambassador to Spain and Lady Chilton who has been in this country for some weeks as the guest of her uncle, Mr. Howard O'Brien, in Grand Rapids, Mich., will visit Washington before her return to Europe, it was learned recently.

Bryn Mawr Club Plans Benefit

Alumnae Group to Sponsor Katherine Hepburn Performance.

When members of the Washington Bryn Mawr Club discovered that their fellow alumna, Katharine Hepburn, was coming to the National Theater March 22 in "Jane Eyre," they decided to take over the second night of the run Tuesday, March 23, for a benefit performance.

Informed originally that Miss Hepburn would not come to Washington, the club first decided to sponsor a performance of the Theater Guild production, "Storm Over Patsy," but through the courtesy of the American Theater Society and the Theater Guild they were enabled to change productions.

Miss Olivia Stokes, chairman of the club's theater committee, was at Bryn Mawr with Miss Hepburn and was in several of her classes. Mrs. Alger Hiss is president of the Washington Bryn Mawr Club.

Farley Dinnerjigs.

Those menu-programs of the Farley testimonial dinner, like symphonies or poetry, become more impressive as time goes on. Looking at one again yesterday afternoon, we became impressed to the point of leading off this column with a description, play by play, of the menu-program coupled with the goings-on and cheering heard on the sidelines.

The menu-program is milk white, nearly a foot wide and a foot long, and its cover has engravings of the Capitol dome and the Washington Monument. Farley's name in golden embossed letters and a golden cord twisted and dashing like the sashes Confederate generals used to wear. One turns from this symphony of the program-binder's art to page one and a picture of Farley, his forehead lightened by studio arcs and his mouth set grimly as on a postal problem.

From there, one turns through a page of complimentary newspaper clippings and other factual matter and memorabilia of Farley to the menu department of the program, which is fixed on a page hard by a picture of Farley in a bathing suit. Even if we can't read the menu, it undoubtedly is a triumph—because such things as Sichel et Fils Freres, Amontillado sherry, breast of Guinea hen Virginienne, and stuffed tomato Bienveillance must be Victories indeed.

The sideline goings-on were as flavored as the golden cord on the menu-program, and were appropriate to any cool of the evening. Consider, if you weren't there—recall if you were—how Farley blushed when a pretty lady kissed him and how he blushed first-class blushes everytime someone said something nice about him. They were saying nice things about him all the evening so, in the logical consequence of things, Farley's face was almost a continual blush . . . and how Gov. Murphy of Michigan (he settled the auto strike) got the biggest hand of any auxiliary speaker . . . and how Helen Jepson (she sang America) looked as she sat by Lawrence Tibbett (he sang "The Star-Spangled Banner) . . . and how the Washington correspondent of the Boston Post thought he felt when everyone had on white or black ties except himself . . . and how Vice President Garner broke the rule of a long lifetime and remained up after 10 p. m. . . . and how Senator Glass talked and carried on with everyone from the renowned side-corner of his mouth . . . and how Mrs. Farley applauded, laughed, when the pretty woman kissed Jim . . . and how the orchestra played Irish melodies with the snap of the seventeenth of March, and how the statesmen sang and, again, how Farley blushed.

Someone over at the Agriculture Department mentioned casually something about a department explorer-collector, which brings to mind the department's reticence about explorer-collectors. Whenever one comes in to report, newsmen bedevil him—not so much for what he has explored or collected but for color stuff from his experiences. What they generally write, it has been pointed out, gives the sense that the explorer-collectors live in lands where life is a dream and the birds sing all day long. Then comes the reaction: People who live the staid sort of life want to become explorer-collectors. Then comes the result: The department is bedeviled with applications from would-be explorer-collectors. And the result of this, to trace the thing through all its consequences, is a mild form of anguish for the department.

Looking through the mails and the left-overs from other mails yesterday, there came to eye this note: "Hens in the major egg-producing sections have responded generously to this winter's mild weather." And this information, for all current uses and purposes, seemed definitely out-of-date with the snow falling more than mildly out of doors. Incidentally, that same snow must have offered a swell chance to souvenir postcard photographers who are running short of Washington winter views.

Pleasant-voiced Bob Marshall, of the Indian Office—who has lived in the Arctic and never drinks or smokes—has a way of jumping, in off moments, on trains and riding to such places as New Jersey or Georgia just to walk the countrysides, relax and think.

POST WANT ADS

Well, I'll Tell You . . . . . By Bob Burns

I think the best education you can give a boy is to teach him to think for himself. It's all right for the father to be the guiding spirit of the home and correct the boy when he gets off on the wrong track, but it's a whole lot better to let the boy think and get the wrong answer than not to let him think at all.

I had one uncle down home who was a tyrant in his own house. That was my Uncle Snad Barlow. Every time his boy would come to him and say, "Paw, I think——" my uncle would cut him off and say, "I'll do the thinkin' around here—you just do what I tell you."

Finally one day, Uncle Snad was called to Chicago on business and before he left, he called his boy to him and said, "Now, I'm going to the city for several days." He says "Now be sure and water that prize bull—that's the most valuable thing I've got." The boy says "All right, Paw, I will."

Well, my uncle went to the city and after he was there two days, he got to worrying about his bull and he sent a wire back to his boy and he says "Did you water the bull?" The next day he got a wire from his boy and the wire said "Yes, sir, I watered the bull but he's dry again—what will I do now?"

Relief Load For District At New Peak

Many Agencies Operating on Reduced Budget; Evils Stressed.

More persons in Washington are seeking relief today than at other time during the depression, and a smaller amount of money is available to meet their needs. Private welfare agencies are receiving twice as many applications for aid as they were this time last year, and because of slim budgets are forced to turn away hundreds of needy families who have no other hope of help.

This gloomy picture of the local relief situation was described yesterday by officials of public and private welfare agencies, who uniformly agreed that unless Congress increases the relief appropriation for the District thousands of families will be stranded on the streets of Washington before the year is over.

Discussing the situation, Elwood Street, director of the D. C. Board of Public Welfare, pointed out that the crying need now is for available funds for families who, because some members are classed as "employable," are not eligible for relief.

"At the time the WPA was giving jobs to thousands of needy employable persons, it was decided that the public assistance division of the Board of Public Welfare should concern itself with dispensing relief only to 'unemployable families,'" Street said. "So-called employable persons were either given WPA jobs or were placed on Federal relief until there were openings for them. The last Federal relief grant was made in November, 1935, and is now used up. WPA jobs are tapering off, and while employable needy persons wait for other openings to develop they have no means of supporting themselves and their families."

Problem Stressed.

Another type of problem arises regarding large families considered ineligible for relief because some member is employed by the WPA at a wage inadequate to meet the needs of persons dependent on WPA for support," Street said. "A man who has a wife and 9 children cannot meet his obligations on a salary of $45 a month," he continued. "His family would not be eligible for relief from us, and yet would be in dire need. Thousands of families today are in this predicament, and neither public nor private agencies are in a position to help them."

The relief situation from the standpoint of four private agencies was discussed by representatives, who bore out Street's opinion, and who stressed the need he had suggested. Miss Edith Hollaway, assistant director of the Family Service Association, said:

"In recent months we have had twice as many applications for relief as we had last winter. Of the 25 or 30 requests we receive daily, the majority come from so-called 'employable families,' who can receive no help from the Board of Public Welfare and turn to us for assistance.

Budgets Slashed.

"Our budget is slimmer than it has been in previous years, and with a mounting number of demands each month, we are forced to turn away hundreds of persons who have no hope of getting aid elsewhere."

Miss Florence A. Murray, supervisor of the Catholic Charities of the District, reported that this agency had to turn away 145 applicants last month; and that the "major relief problem at present revolves around families in which there is an 'employable' member who cannot find a job or earns a salary that does not begin to meet the need of the family."

Insufficient income and lack of available funds for employable families were called "the chief causes—but not the only ones—for the District's deplorable relief situation" by Morris Klass, director of Jewish Social Service Agency. In his opinion the problem could be solved (1) by a relief appropriation from Congress to meet the need for employables who cannot support themselves and their families; (2) by the establishment of a new policy on the part of the WPA to employ needy persons who have not been on relief rolls; (3) by creating adequate facilities to care for chronic invalids.

Many Face Starvation.

Klass mentioned, also, that the situation could be helped greatly "if landlords were a little less hasty in sending eviction notices. In most cities, landlords are helping to bear the brunt of the relief problem. In a few instances they are doing so here; but in most cases needy families, regardless of their condition or the lack of chances they will receive aid from any source, are being forced to the street."

A volunteer welfare worker at Gallinger Hospital for more than four years, Mrs. Morris Cotgrave Betts, who now is chairman of the philanthropic committee of the Friends Meeting Society, of Washington, declared that she knew of "families now facing starvation with absolutely no hope of being helped by any organization—public or private."

Bocock Report Holds Gallinger Still Has Space

Hospital Set New Population Record in January; Average 961.7.

Although a new record in the average daily population at Gallinger Hospital was established during the month of January, Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent, in his monthly report to the Board of Public Welfare yesterday, said the institution "could not be considered distressingly crowded."

The average number of patients treated at the hospital each day during the month was 961.7 as compared with 915.1 during January of last year, Dr. Bocock reported.

At one time, he said, 1,022 patients were registered as against the lowest figure of 868.

Distribution Favorable.

"Fortunately, the distribution of cases was favorable so that only in the male medical service and obstetrical department was crowding particularly severe," Dr. Bocock said. "In other subdivisions, the case load was handled with reasonable satisfaction, and while they were very full, the wards could not be considered distressingly crowded."

The pediatric service, Dr. Bocock reported, was especially active during the month with a daily average of 80.1 patients. More than 100 children were treated in the wards during this period, he added.

The daily increase of patients was caused by a large number of respiratory diseases, particularly pneumonia, Dr. Bocock said. In the isolation pavilion, he reported, the daily average was 60.3 patients.

Space in Tubercular Wards.

Tuberculosis wards were only "reasonably filled" during the period, the report stated. There was a daily average of 153.4 patients in these wards.

"There continues to be crowding in the building for white tuberculosis patients," Dr. Bocock declared, "and this condition has resulted in the necessity for retaining certain of these persons in the general medical wards temporarily.

"It is expected to correct this situation within a month's time by opening more commodious buildings for white patients and thus making possible the immediate transfer of individuals with this disease from the medical wards," Dr. Bocock concluded.

Victims of Bandits To Attend Line-Up

Police last night were completing plans for a large line-up at which victims of Richard Carl Parks, 19, red-haired bandit, will attempt to identify the youth and a companion.

Meanwhile, Lieut. John H. Fowler, supervisor of the robbery squad, who directed the seizure of Parks and Silvio Joseph Danero, 23, of 114 Quincy place northeast, said every effort is being made to locate the third member of the notorious robber band.

The third youth, James Phelps, 18, of 59 Randolph street northwest, escaped through a police dragnet when he leaped from the second-floor window of his home.

Parks confessed to police Tuesday afternoon that he with Danero and Phelps held up eight business houses, stole two automobiles and broke into a sporting goods store in a two-week period.

Snow Parking Ban Traps 2 Victims, Both Convicted

Two motorists had the unhappy experience of being the first persons to be convicted here under the new snow-removal regulation, which bans parking between the hours of 2 a. m. and 8 or 9:30 a. m.

Judge Isaac R. Hitt found the men guilty in Traffic Court yesterday and said he believed the arrests legal because in one case snow was actually falling when the car was parked, and in the other it snowed after the driver parked.

Lynn Jenkins, 3075 M street northwest, was given a suspended $2 fine, and Harry Bettelman, 4550 Connecticut avenue northwest, was released on his personal bond.

Judge Hitt, after passing sentences, said in these cases an emergency existed, but thought the regulation would not apply when there was no snow.

Dog Discovers Rifle Victim's Body in Woods

Note Found in Pocket Indicates New York Man Took Life.

A man tentatively identified as William G. Flannigan, jr., 30, of New York City, was found shot to death in the woods near Fourteenth street and Rhode Island avenue northeast late yesterday.

A bullet from a .22-caliber rifle, which he clutched in one hand, went through his forehead.

Detective Sergt. John Dalglish, investigating the case, said a note to the dead man's father was in one pocket.

Bough Rifle Here.

Apparently the price Flannigan paid to end his own life was $5.07, for police said they learned he had purchased the rifle at a downtown store for $4.80, after registering it, and then bought the shells, which cost him 27 cents.

Flannigan must have killed himself, police said, sometime after the snow abated before midnight Tuesday. Although his body sprawled in the snow, there was no snow upon the upturned face, hands and clothing.

Dog Discovers Body.

The dog, running ahead, went into a small valley, where the body lay, and began to howl. Brown called police.

Flannigan was comparatively well dressed. He wore a neat business suit and topcoat, although his shoes were half soled.

Cash Reported Missing After Gaming Raid

Sligo-born John J. Hargadon, janitor of an apartment house at 1302 L street northwest, lost $193 yesterday under rather unusual circumstances. The vice squad had just raided his apartment.

Missing along with the $193 were a diamond stickpin, a gold ring and a perfectly good telephone. The stickpin was a family heirloom but Hargadon said he had had the telephone for only about five years—just long enough to become attached to it.

Also attached to the telephone, according to Capt. George Little of the vice squad, was a direct line to a cigar store on the first floor. Capt. Little explained that that was the reason the telephone was removed.

Hargadon discovered the loss of his possessions some time after the police had left. The door to his apartment had been forced, he said, and his bureau drawers ransacked.

When he discovered the loss of his valuables and learned from the boys in the cigar store that the vice squad had been seen upon the premises Hargadon went to police headquarters. He demanded a warrant for the arrest of the raiding officers.

Told it was too late to get a warrant Hargadon went home, saying he would return this morning to swear out the papers. He said that the police had no right to search his apartment.

Capt. Little admitted his men had raided the cigar store in a drive against bookmaking establishments but disclaimed any knowledge of the $193, the stickpin or the ring. No arrests were made.

Gang of Youths Confesses Stealing 42 Automobiles

The "Overalls" gang, youths whose uniforms in stealing automobiles, dismantling them and selling the parts, consisted of blue overalls and blue sweaters, have been rounded up and have confessed to stealing 42 cars, police announced last night.

Among the thefts were the automobiles, police asserted, of Representatives John A. Martin, of Colorado, and Francis H. Case, of South Dakota. All the cars they took they pried apart, police said, selling valuable parts for what they could get. The total loot reached about $2,500, according to Detective Sergt. Joseph Connors and members of the automobile squad, the arresting officers.

The prisoners are Joseph Furr, 25, of the 1300 block of Eleventh street northwest, charged with being the "brains" of the gang; Henry A. Glasgow, 17, of the 1300 block of K street southeast; John Mockbee, 17, of the 500 block of Sixth street southeast, and five boys, described by police as juveniles.

House Group Pigeon-Holes Bottling Bill

Beer Statute for D. C. Recalled Because of Misapprehension.

The House District Committee in another acrimonious session yesterday recalled and pigeonholed a bill prohibiting the bottling of imported beer in the District and sent the antigambling measure passed by the Senate to the United States attorney's office for modification.

The beer bill had been reported favorably by the committee last week under the misapprehension that it was designed to prevent bootlegging.

Local representatives of Milwaukee breweries, which send beer here by kegs for bottling in Washington plants, pointed out that it would force them to close the bottling plants. They intimated that the measure was designed to give Baltimore brewers an advantage.

Protests Recall.

Palmisano told the committee that he did not learn of the effect of the bill until after it had been reported, but he made vehement protest against the subsequent action of the committee in recalling it before he arrived at the meeting.

As a move to pacify him, the committee then adopted a motion that in the future no bill would be recalled unless the member who sponsored it is given a week's warning.

The bill to strengthen the District gambling acts was attacked by two members and by Palmisano, who last year bottled up the measure in his subcommittee after it had passed the Senate.

Representative Sacks (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, said he was opposed to making the possessor of numbers slips equally guilty with the operator of the policy game. His view was indorsed by Representative Allen (Democrat), of Delaware.

"System of Graft."

"Everybody in the District is at the mercy of the Police Department under this bill," Sacks said. "This proposed law would set up a system of graft.

"You are practically setting up in this bill authority for any police officer to walk into anybody's home to make a search purely on his information and belief that the law is being violated."

Palmisano suggested that the bill should carry an amendment barring newspapers from publishing race track information, on which the numbers game is played, when the races are not held "near" Washington.

Through Attorney Bernard I. Nordlinger, the administratrix claimed the car that inflicted injuries on Cannon was owned by John E. Donnelly, 7055 Eastern avenue northeast.

GIST BLAIR.

D. C. Hospital Board Headed By Maj. Blair

Committee Named to Draft Resolution in Memory of Karl W. Corby.

Maj. Gist Blair, prominent Washingtonian, yesterday was named president of the board of directors of Emergency Hospital. He will serve the unexpired term of Karl W. Corby, who died recently in Florida.

The board named a committee to prepare a resolution in recognition of the work of Mr. Corby, to be included in the minutes of the board. An engraved copy of the resolution will be sent to Mrs. Corby.

Maj. Blair, Charles Colfax Long, Charles Henry Butler, Dr. A. B. Moore and Dr. William Earl Clark were named to prepare the resolution.

Maj. Blair, son of Montgomery Blair, Postmaster General in Lincoln's Cabinet, is a member of one of Washington's most distinguished families. He has practiced law in the various courts of the District. His home, Blair House, at 1651 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, is one of the city's historic shrines.

Maj. Blair is a brother of the late Woodbury Blair, president of Emergency Hospital from 1913 to 1933, under whose administration the institution grew from a small building at Fourteenth street and Ohio avenue to its present size, having treated 40,000 persons during last year.

Adm. Pettengill Better.

Rear Admiral George T. Pettengill, commandant of the local Navy Yard and superintendent of the Naval Gun Factory, was reported in good condition yesterday following an operation at the Naval Hospital. Operated on for thyroid, he is expected to leave the hospital inside three weeks.

Playgrounds Control Shift Plan Studied

The House sub-committee on District appropriations yesterday considered proposals to place all playground activity on school playgrounds under direction of the school administration, it was learned, and also looked with favor upon a request that an appropriation for boys' clubs in the schools be enlarged.

The sub-committee completed consideration of the public school estimates. Further sessions may be postponed until early next week as members of the sub-committee are to be out of the city.

Under the present procedure, the school playgrounds are under direction of the District playground department during the summer vacation periods.

Members of the sub-committee have indicated a belief that the school administration should retain control of these recreational sites and of the activities upon them all year.

A change such as this would necessitate the reduction of the District playground appropriation and the transfer of the same amount to the Community Center Department, which is under the direction of the school administration.

The sub-committee was understood to have been impressed with the record of the limited number of boys' clubs in the schools and to be willing to expand the $75,000 appropriation recommended by the Budget Bureau.

A total of $150,000 had been requested for this item, and the District Commissioners had reduced it to $100,000.

Boy on Sled Killed In Crash With Taxi

The District's first sledding accident resulted in death for an 18-year-old youth early yesterday morning. His death brought the local traffic toll to 23, 7 above last year's total.

Waple was taken to the hospital by Arthur E. Bingler, 28, 323 First street northeast, driver of the taxicab. Bingler will appear at a coroner's inquest.

MaxGordonHit Comes Back to Feature Week

'Pride and Prejudice' Is to Compete With Other Plays and Ace Films.

Max Gordon's production of Helen Jerome's dramatization of Jane Austen's famous novel of "Pride and Prejudice" will play a return engagement in the National Theater the week beginning next Monday night. It was here that the play had its premiere prior to an extended Broadway run. The present cast is headed by such admirable players as Muriel Kirkland, Lowell Gilmore, Molly Pearson, remembered from the days of "Bunty Pulls the Strings;" Eugenia Rawls, Evelyn Byrd, Robert Conness, Staats Gotsworth, David Orrick, J. Plumpton Wilson, Esther Mitchell and Helen Strickland. There will be the customary Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"Mulatto," the stark melodrama of the South by Langdon Hughes, which has a long New York run to its credit, will be presented next week at the Belasco Theater. This Martin Jones production will open Sunday night and matinees will be given on Monday, Thursday and Saturday. The cast, composed largely of the players who participated in the Broadway run, includes Stuart Beebe, Miriam Battista, Abbie Mitchell, Richard S. Bishop, Hurst Amyx, Edwin Forsberg, Harry Hanlon, Richard Midgley and John Marriott. The locale of the story is a Georgia plantation; the principal characters its owner and his mulatto son.

Errol Flynn, Anita Louise and Margaret Lindsay have the principal roles in the Warner Brothers picturization of the best-selling novel, "Green Light," opening tomorrow on the screen at the Earle Theater. Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Walter Abel, leading man with Katharine Cornell in "The Wingless Victory;" Henry O'Neill and Spring Byington are important members of the supporting cast. Mr. Flynn is cast in the role of a young surgeon. On the stage, five of America's ace song writers will headline the bill—Charlie Tobias, Gerald Marks, Al Sherman, Murray Mencer, and Walter Samuels. Roscoe Ates, the stuttering comic; Robert Williams, with Red Dust, his dog, and the Variety Gambols will complete the bill.

"Love Is News" is the title of the film play to be presented for the week beginning tomorrow on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, with Loretta Young and Tyrone Power in the cofeatured roles. George Sanders, the Stacey of "Lloyds of London" is the fortune-hunting villian, a chore he does especially well. Others in the cast include Stepin Fetchit, "Slim" Summerville—who is getting fat—Walter Catlett, Jane Darwell, Frank Conroy and Dudley Digges. On the stage the entertainment will be presented by Maj. Bowes' all-girl revue, featuring a feminine "swing" band and a stellar group of specialists.

Open today on the screen at the RKO-Keith Theater, the principal film feature will be "Sea Devils," a story of the Coast Guard Service, in which the foremost roles are played by Victor McLaglen, Preston Foster and Ida Lupino. In support are Gordon Jones, Helen Flint, Pierre Watkin, Murray Alper, Billy Gilbert and Donald Woods. The story was written by Frank Wead and John Twist.

"Penrod and Sam," a new filming of the Booth Tarkington fiction, will be the chief feature of the bill at the Warner Brothers' Metropolitan Theater for the week begining tomorrow. Billy Mauch and Harry Watson will be seen in the title roles. This is a small-town story set in an atmosphere in which Tarkington excels. A large number of additional juvenile players are in the cast. The usual supplementaries will complete the bill.

Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops

Harry Hunter, Headed for Australia, Is Toasted and Roasted in Small Ballroom of the Willard; Notables of Theater Visit Capital for Day; Daughters of Famous Actors Coming in New Guild Play; News Items and Gossip of the Current Theater.

SELDOM does one encounter so felicitous an occasion as the farewell banquet tendered by the Variety Club of Washington to Harry Hunter, for 14 years Washington branch exchange manager for Paramount Pictures, in the small ballroom of the Willard Hotel on Tuesday night. Mr. Hunter leaves at the end of this week to assume the general directorship of all Paramount activities in Australia.

BELL.

Leaders of the motion picture industry, local exhibitors, theater managers, distributors, representatives of the press and close friends of the honor guest crowded the small ballroom to its capacity.

Seated at the speakers' table on the dais were an illustrious group of personalities whose efforts have done much to place the cinema on its present high plane, among them Percy Block and Joe Unger, Paramount executives; Charles C. Pettijohn, chief legal counsel of the Will H. Hays organization; Ed Kuykendahl, president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America, national organization, and Stephen Early, secretary to President Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Others of local importance at the speakers' table included John J. Payette, of the Warner Brothers Co.; Sam Galanty, division manager for Columbia Pictures; Charles Kranz, Washington manager for United Artists, and Vincent Daugherty, of Paramount.

Carter Barron, Eastern division manager of Loew's, Inc., made the opening address, introducing Rudolph Berger, Washington manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, chairman of the banquet committee, who did an especially fine job of arranging the details of a perfectly appointed and sumptuous repast. Mr. Berger, in turn, relinquished the podium to A. Julian Brylawski, who acted as toastmaster for the remainder of the evening.

Glib and complimentary speeches were made in extollation of the many virtues of character and personality possessed by Harry Hunter and each was touched, at one time or another, with a dash of sentiment expressive of the regret which Washington feels in losing a companionable film executive of high standing in a community which he has served for a decade and a half.

Among the speakers were Percy Block, Joe Unger, Ed Kuykendahl, Charlie Pettijohn and Jay Emmanuel, Philadelphia exhibitor and publisher of a string of successful regional motion picture trade papers.

For some unknown reason, no local exhibitor, exchange manager or representative of the press was given an opportunity by Toastmaster Brylawski to express something of the regard they hold for the guest of honor. The speech-making was restricted to out-of-towners and Mr. Brylawski himself.

Entertainment was offered by Talbott Haslett, barytone, and the Radio Ramblers, from the stage bill current at the Earle Theater. There also was shown a specially made "television" reel, picturing Joe Morgan and Abe Lichtman, sipping their champagne in the luxury of a Hollywood hotel and wishing Harry Hunter all kinds of good luck in his new venture. They are awaiting him now in San Francisco, by the way, and probably will sail as far as Honolulu on the ship that will carry Harry to the Antipodes.

A fine tribute it all was to a fine fellow, who deserves the distinguished promotion that has come to him. I add my congratulations to all the others that have been showered upon him.

There were distinguished representatives of the theater in Washington yesterday. Among them were Warren Munsell, of the Theater Guild, Sidney Howard, president of the American Association of Playwrights, if that is what it is called; Gilbert Miller, noted producer and theater owner, whose interests span the Atlantic, and Milton Weinberger, attorney for important theatrical interests. These distinguished practitioners of the playhouse were in the National Capital to attend hearings on the Dickstein bill, pending before the House of Representatives.

• • • •

The daughters of two well known actors will be in the Theater Guild's forthcoming production, "Storm Over Patsy," sixth of the subscription plays of the American Theater Society of Washington, to be presented in the National Theater the week of March 1.

They are Claudia Morgan, daughter of Ralph Morgan and niece of Frank Morgan, formerly of the living theater, but now very much of Hollywood, and Valerie Cossart, daughter of Ernest Cossart, a noted Thespian who has appeared in many Guild productions, but now seems also to have become definitely attached to the film colony.

James Kirkwood, having fallen victim to the flu, will not be seen in next week's production of "Mulatto" at the Belasco. His role will be played by its creator on the New York stage, Stuart Beebe. One sympathizes with Mr. Kirkwood, erstwhile screen player and husband of Lila Lee, but is constrained to feel that Washington will not be deprived of a completely satisfactory interpretation of a sensational play.

• • • •

Reverting briefly to that Harry Hunter banquet, before the evening was over Mr. Hunter had been presented with a complete outfit of luggage as a parting gift from his Washington friends—full-size wardrobe trunk, two suitcases that a horse could not jump over and all of the interior fittings.

His two suits certainly will rattle around in that trunk!

• • • •

Meteorological Note.

Would it be safe now, do you think, to crack about the snowstorm?

Have Important Place in "News"

When "Love Is News" opens on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater tomorrow, these pictured players will be seen in important roles. They are, as anyone can see, Loretta Young and "Slim" Summerville, whose poundage has completely outgrown his sobriquet. Two other important members of the cast are Tyrone Power and Don Ameche, two of the most popular of the newer and younger screen leading men.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDDLER

Hollywood, Feb. 17.—Settin Around (Universal): A trip over the back lot of this studio is a journey down Memory Lane. On all sides loom time-worn sets, each reminds of great pictures of the past. The crumbling replica of Notre Dame Cathedral, where Lon Chaney grimaced his way to stardom as "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." This set will be renovated for use in "The Road Back."

EDNA FERBER.

The junk heap which was a highlight of "My Man Godfrey," sprawls back of the cathedral. Next are the scarred battlefields and shelled buildings, reminders of "All Quiet on the Western Front." To one side floats (on dry land) the river boat which steamed Edna Ferber's "Show Boat" on to the screen. Nearby are very old sets where Mary Philbin made "Merry-go-Round," and Priscilla Dean portrayed her never-to-be-forgotten "The Virgin of Stamboul."

• • • •

Many of the old scenes caused my eyes to "puddle up." They are mute reminders of the successes and tragedies of this fascinating, heart-breaking town. Universal, pioneer studio, has truly been called the cradle of stardom. Nearly every important star has worked here at one time or another.

• • • •

On the "We Have Our Moments" set, I found a very red-faced Jimmy Dunn. He had just been made victim of a rib. Jimmy had been griping about people grabbing his chair; his yelp was that when he found a moment to rest, he could find no place to sit down. So today the property department, under the leadership of Sally Eillers, built a four-foot fence with a padlock gate. This was placed so that it caged Dunn's chair, and on the gate was hung a sign: "No Tresspassing."

• • • •

Virginia Bruce (on the "When Love Is Young" set) told me that when she was a very small girl, she had a trick of grabbing the daily paper and reading the obituary notices. This went on for some time, and her mother became worried, because it seemed unhealthy for such a little girl to be interested in such a morbid subject. She remonstrated with her daughter, and this, Virginia tells me, was her little girl's answer: "I try to find my name in the paper, mama, but it's never there.

Palace Holds Lloyd's Movie Another Week

Loew's Columbia Also Repeating With 'The Plainsman.'

"Lloyd's of London," as it justly deserves by every virtue of story, cast and production, will continue for a second week at Loew's Palace Theater, beginning tomorrow. The principal roles in this expansive subject are played by Tyrone Power, Madeleine Carroll, Freddie Bartholomew, Sir Guy Standing, C. Aubrey Smith and Virginia Fields, with a huge ensemble in support. The short subjects also will be held over.

Beginning tomorrow at Loew's Columbia Theater, the chief feature of the screen bill will be Cecil B. De Mille's production of "The Plainsman," in which the foremost roles are played by Gary Cooper and Jean Arthur, with a strong cast in support. This is a repeat engagement that will be supplemented by the usual short subjects and newsreel.

Douglas Fairbanks, jr., and Elissa Landi have the co-stellar roles in the film version of Jeffery Farnol's "The Amater Gentleman," which will be shown for the first time in Washington as chief feature of the bill at the Rialto Theater for the week beginning Sunday. As a companion attraction, the Marx Brothers' "Duck Soup" will be included on the program.

"A Tale of Two Cities," with Ronald Colman in the stellar role, will be revived at the Little Theater for the week beginning Sunday. Other members of the cast are Elizabeth Allan, Donald Woods, Henry B. Walthall, Basil Rathbone, Edna May Oliver and Blanche Yurka.

Coming to the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with the usual Sunday matinee, the "Top Hat Revue" will present Joe De Rita and Harry Meyers as its chief comedians. The feminine contingent will be led by that platinum beauty, Mae Brown. This is heralded as one of the Independent Burlesque Association's best.

LAUGHTER: George Abbott went to New Haven last week to oversee the premiere of his road company of "Brother Rat." Abbott was invited to address the famous Baker class in drama at Yale . . . When he completed his lecture he agreed to answer all questions . . . The first question asked was "Do managers object to trite dialogue in plays?" . . . Abbott gritted his teeth and nodded . . . The second student asked: "Is it bad for a play to have too many laughs in it?" . . . The producer gulped and again nodded . . . "But if you have any to spare," he assured the drama student, "come around to see me and I'll buy em."

PRIDE: Buddy de Sylva, the producer at Universal, finally has announced that he'll produce a picture entitled "Mr. Broadway," based upon the career of Billy Rose . . . "I'm casting the roles now," he wired Rose, "and hired Ken Murray to portray you. Any suggestions? . . . "Yes," Rose wired back. "For the role of Billy Rose you should hire one of these three—Leslie Howard, Maurice Evans or John Gielgud."

KNIGHTS OF THE DIAMOND.
Local No. 18.

Oscar Q. Schmelderhorn,
Grand Exalted Pitcher.
New York.

Dear Boss:

Lotsa things has been happenin' since you tells me to step out and do some scoutin' around among the peasants and it ain't all been pleasant work. This business of bein' a organizer for the Union is a tough job and doncha think it ain't. It's gettin' so my wife don't recognize me no more when I goes home after a jaunt into the provinces tryin' to make a honest livin.' She says why don't I be like her cousin Lafe what went in the sausage business and now owns a limousine. "That's the baloney!" says I to her, boss, bein' always clever on the repartee like you told me. Seems as though women don't just understand the ways of progress and the meanin' of our Great Cause.

Well, I was layin' around readin' that part of "Gone With the Wind" where Scarlett O'Hara is askin' Rhett Butler for a loan of 300 berries with tears in her eyes. I like that Scarlett lady, boss, cause she reminds me of my old pal, Irish Bill O'Hara, who drove a brewery wagon for Schultz. But that's another story.

I was readin' this part of the book when all of a sudden the phone rings and Ike Mopes out in Sioux Falls is buzzin' me on the Bell System (that means 'phone' in our North Jersey talk, boss) and Ike starts to beef 'cause he's secretary of Local No. 18 and none of the ball players has paid any dues since last Ash Wednesday. And you know, boss, a Union without dues is like Gene Tunney without Shakespeare.

* * * *

Like I already writ you, boss, I leaves that organizin' job in Pittsburgh where Pie Traynor has things under control and hikes out here. I don't recall if it was the Steel City beer or "Gone With the Wind" what done it, but I gets me an idea what is an idea, boss. I says to myself, "If these guys don't pay dues, somethin's gotta be done?" Bein' quick on the trigger like that comes kinda like second nature to me, you know, boss, seein' as how I once won five brass rings on a fair grounds merry-go-round. That may not sound like much, off hand, but it will when I tell you them rings was soldered on the hook!

* * * *

So I hops the next freight, I mean train, and two "Gone With the Wind" chapters later I am in Sioux Falls. Ordinarily the trip would take one and a half chapters but some section hands was havin' a sit-down strike and you know, boss, it ain't ethical to go sweepin' through a coupla hundred pick pushers splattered all over the track.

* * * *

I breezes into Sioux Falls like Dempsey's fist through a paper bag. Not bein' naturally vain, I didn't expect any reception committee so you can imagine my surprize when a half dozen local gendarmes escorts me into a broken down Maria and whisks me off to Ike's house. I ain't had such attention since I fell on my head from the second floor of Aunt Lucy's house. There wouldn't have been much excitement then, either, only the coal stove was in the road.

* * * *

The tommies ushers me into Ike's room and there is our first class secretary in the dredges of despair. (That's one of the classy phrases I picked up from that correspondence course you bought me for Christmas, boss.) A word about them tommies, boss. They is polite as chorus boys in a Ray Bolger show but each has shoulders like a Nebraska fullback, mitts like King Levinsky, so, bein' a peaceful citizen, anyhow, I mooches along.

* * * *

"The situation," Ike says, "is acute!" borrowing a bon mot from Voltaire. Not to be outdone, I borrows a phrase from Joe Louis. "So what?" says I. "We will meet the boys tonight and get to the bottom of this thing."

The hall was packed, chief, and, as I now look back on the proceedings, some of them boys came to the meeting not exactly with love in their hearts. I starts off an address that floors 'em, chief. It will go down in history with Lincoln's Gettysburg speech, Pitt's address to Parliament and Dizzy Dean's retort to Branch Rickey. Was I terrific that night!

* * * *

"Boys," says I, "let's be friends." And with this, I lays my knucklers and blackjack on the table. The boys follows in like manner and the din is terrific—and a great relief to me!

I knowed the situation was acute. I asked for a explanation. "Why this no-dues strike?" I demands to know. Lefty O'Gallaghan, the star pitcher, volunteers a answer.

"Chick Stremski, our catcher, is gettin' only $14,999 a year." Lefty says. "Unless he gits $15,000, we will pay no dues and, if worse comes to worse, will wage a lay-down strike."

* * * *

It was a real spot to be in, eh, boss? But nothin' for a experienced man like me. I pulls 98 cents outa my pocket, passes the hat for 2 more and gives 'em to Chick Stremski. Chick beams like a kid what just broke a window and we all stands to sing our Union Anthem, especially the part what goes like this:

We are forever loyal to our union great and strong,
And with teamwork all together we will get along,

Sincerely,
J. DARIUS (Jake) DOONE.

P. S. Enclosed is the dollar I collected from Catcher Stremski for delinquent dues.—J. D. D.

Braddock-Louis Bout Given Comiskey Park

Chicago, Feb. 17.—Heavyweight Champion Jimmy Braddock will defend his title for the first time against Bomber Joe Louis at Comiskey Park next June 22, Matchmaker Joe Foley announced today.

Soldier Field officially was counted out as a possible site today when the Chicago Park board carried out its threat to demand 25 per cent of the gross receipts as rental fee.

"When the park board indicated last week it would ask one-fourth the gate, we came to terms with Owner J. Louis Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox," Foley said.

What rental agreement was reached with Comiskey, Foley failed to announce. It was reported, however, the copromoters would turn over 5 per cent of the gross receipts.

Once the contracts are signed, however, the battle to stage the first heavyweight title fight in Chicago since 1927 likely will just be started.

There already exists a contract with Madison Square Garden for a championship bout between Braddock and Max Schmeling, of Germany. This contract was made before the Sporting Club of Illinois made its offer of $500,000 to Braddock for a defense against Louis at Chicago.

Mike Jacobs, of the Twentieth Century Sporting Club in New York, who became copromoter of the Chicago fight on the strength of his long-term contract with Louis, appeared confident the Louis-Braddock match could not be stopped.

Yankees Buy 1st Sacker As a Slap

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17.—The New York Yankees purchased First Baseman Ellsworth (Babe) Dahlgren from the Boston Red Sox as protection against a prolonged holdout by Lou Gehrig.

This was the Yankees' first official indication that they will open the American League season without Gehrig rather than pay him the $50,000 he has demanded.

After Gehrig's refusal to accept the $31,000-contract offered him by the Yankees, Owner Jacob Ruppert angrily announced: "We'll put a team on the field. There isn't a man on the club who can't be replaced." The purchase of Dahlgren was generally accepted as evidence of Ruppert's determination to back up his words with action.

Dahlgren played with Syracuse in the International League last year. He batted .318 and fielded .990. He is 24 years old, 6 feet tall and weighs 190 pounds.

No Comparison.

Except in size and defensive ability, Dahlgren hardly compares with Gehrig. He came to the Boston Red Sox from the San Francisco Missions in 1934 and played regularly at first base the following year, hitting .263 in 149 games. His fielding was sensational but the Sox wanted more power. Consequently Dahlgren was shipped off when the Bostons acquired Jimmie Foxx from the Athletics. He was recalled for a trip South with the Red Sox this spring.

The Yankees took one other step to clear up the holdout situation today when Col. Ruppert and Pitcher Lefty Gomez tried unsuccessfully to agree on terms.

"I offered Gomez $12,500, and he asked for $18,000," Ruppert said. "I also told him $12,500 was my last offer. He was very nice about it, but he wants too much money."

Gomez verified this, even to the part about being "very nice." Lefty said he would go to Boston Monday, and probably return for another conference with the colonel late next week.

There was still no indication today that Gehrig intends to discuss terms again with Ruppert. It is generally conceded the Yankees are willing to pay Gehrig $36,000. This represents a $5,000 increase.

Apostoli Beats Solly Krieger

Victor Forges to Front in Smashing Verdict.

New York, Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Young Fred Apostoli, San Francisco's battling bellhop, smashed into the front ranks of middleweight contenders tonight with a sparkling 10-round decision over veteran Solly Krieger of New York in a bloody battle before 5,000 fans at the Hoppodrome.

Beaten by Ken Overlin, of Richmond, Va., in his New York debut in the same ring several weeks ago, the chestnut-haired Californian rolled up a wide margin for nine rounds and then teetered on the brink of defeat in the final session as the battered New Yorker found the range and rocked Freddie with long, smashing rights.

Krieger, who had won only two rounds previous to the last, according to the United Press score sheet, opened a nasty cut over Apostoli's right eye with a sharp left just after the final round started. Blood poured rapidly from the wound and both fighters were bathed with red as they stood toe-to-toe and slugged it out.

Krieger Comes Back.

He split Krieger's lip in the first round and opened the wound further with a sizzling left in the fifth. In the sixth he opened a gash on the black-haired New York veteran's nose. In the eighth, he opened a cut on Solly's lower lip and in the eighth he cut Solly above the left eye.

But, as the last round proved, Krieger was far from a beaten boy despite the fact he was unable consistently to beat down the annoying left which the rangy West Coaster kept sticking in his face.

Apostoli, who weighed a pound less than his opponent—Krieger scaled 160¼ and Freddie 159¼—captured six rounds in taking the unanimous decision of the referee and two judges. Krieger, according to the United Press score sheet, won the third, eighth and ninth rounds, with the tenth even.

Comiskey, Chisox Owner, Suffering Holdout Trouble Gives Raise to One, Mailed Fist to Other

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 17.—J. Louis Comiskey, owner of the Chicago White Sox, dropped his 365-pound bulk into a chair in the famous Woodland Bards' room at the ball park today and groaned.

Comiskey was suffering from holdout troubles—five of them, with Luke Appling, 1936 batting champion of the major league, and Zeke Bonura, the Sox first baseman, causing the principal groans. The other holdouts are Jackie Hayes, second baseman; Rip Radcliffe, an outfielder, and Pitcher "Sugar" Cain. Comiskey, however, wasn't worrying about the last three.

The master of the White Sox was worried about Bonura, who is wintering down at New Orleans, but not so much concerned about Appling, who, he feels, will accept the latest offer made him. Appling, ace shortstop, has been sent a contract with the handsome figure of $17,500 written therein, representing the largest wage ever paid a White Sox ball player, outside of Al Simmons, who came to the Sox on his reputation and a holdover contract. The original offer to Appling was $15,000, with $2,500 bonus, the latter based on attendance, but Appling balked at this, with the result that a new contract was sent him.

Comiskey says that Bonura is a holdout "way out of line." He has returned his contract unsigned and has been telling everybody, except Comiskey, what he wants in regard to salary. He received $8,500 last year and Comiskey offered him $10,000 for the 1937 seson. Bringing his fist down with a rap on his desk, Comiskey says Zeke will accept that figure or stay in New Orleans.

"He never once told me what he wants," Comiskey roared. "He won't get it anyway. But I'd just like to know."

Young Comiskey, who inherited the White Sox upon the death of his famous father in 1931, has a burning ambition to fashion another pennant winner for the Sox fans. The first since the "Black Sox" scandal of 1919. His team placed third last year with an amazing finish, the first time that it had wound up in the first division since 1920.

Based on the remarkable showing of a year ago, Comiskey honestly believes that his White Sox will win the American League championship this year. But he has probably forgotten that the New York Yankees still are in the same league. Jimmie Dykes, the manager, is not so bold in his prediction, figuring that the Yankees will repeat but that the Sox will be right up there. So there's mutiny in the ranks already.

The 51-year-old Comiskey, one of the most picturesque and aggressive characters in baseball, is much like his illustrious father. He has always lived in the atmosphere of the diamond, having played baseball in college. He spends most of his spare time in his estate in northern Wisconsin, as did his father.

Comiskey loves to entertain, eat to his heart's content, and occasionally knock over a snifter of rum. The woodland bards' room at the Sox park, lavishly fitted by his father, is a haven for Comiskey's friends. During the winter season the master of the White Sox invites 40 to 50 friends to the bards' room at least twice a month so they can stuff themselves with turkey and the trimmings, or game.

Adorning the walls of the room are the heads of deer, bear and fish and trophies that the late Charles A. Comiskey prized so dearly. Over the roaring fireplace is a sign bearing this inscription, "My friends are always welcome here." And they truthfully are. The room is immense, probably 75 feet long, and off it is a completely furnished kitchen with equipment to cook for 100 or more.

Comiskey enjoys his parties even more than do his guests. He usually sheds his coat and vest and sits at the head of the table, just as his father did before him, and loves to eat, drink and thoroughly enjoy life.

Henry Dew Sets Mark In Alamo Downs Race

San Antonio, Tex., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Lowering the old track record by two seconds to 2:34, Henry Dew led all the way to cop the mile and a half feature at Alamo Downs today, with Oaten finishing second and Comradeship third.

The former record of 2:36 was set by Double Dare May 14, 1935.

Alumni of Virginia Plan Scholarships

Richmond, Va., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Support for the proposed plan of Richmond Alumni of the University of Virginia to provide scholarships for young men of "exceptional athletic distinction," was voiced in three other cities of the State today.

Cary J. Wilkins, president of the Lynchburg Alumni Chapter, said a meeting will be held there soon to discuss the possibility of establishing an annual $800 scholarship.

He said he intended to attend a meeting in Richmond Monday, when the plan will be laid down before the entire chapter by a Richmond committee. The latter group, said President Guy Hazelgrove, wishes to set up from one to five $800-a-year scholarships.

Under the proposed alumni-assistance plan, recipients of the scholarship would be selected on qualities of character, preparatory school scholastic records, physical fitness, and athletic ability.

At the university, Norton Pritchett, director of athletics, said he wished to withhold comment until he talks to Richmond alumni Monday night.

Schmeling Defers Trip.

New York Feb. 17 (U.P.).—Max Schmeling, former heavyweight champion, who was scheduled to sail for New York on Friday, has deferred his departure from Germany until February 24, Joe Jacobs, his American manager, said today. Jacobs said that Schmeling's exhibition tour, scheduled to start March 2, would start March 8.

3d-Round Flurry By Bored Negro Curls Up His Foe

D. C. Fighter Goes Down Early in 4th, Grabs at Referee to Hoist Self; 14,000 Pay $27,000 to See Battle.

By the United Press.

Municipal Auditorium, Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 17.—Joe Louis, the brown dynamiter of the heavyweights, exploded a fistic firecracker on the tender jaw of Natie Brown and scored a knockout in the fourth round of a scheduled ten-round bout tonight. Brown, who went ten rounds with Louis two years ago when the Detroit battler was just out after 42 seconds of the round.

In the first three rounds not one damaging blow was struck by either fighter. While coming out in the fourth round, Brown suddenly appeared to have become stricken with an acute case of the jitters.

Grabs Referee.

Louis cuffed him with a short left. Brown stumbled, turned as though to run, and caught another short left and a right to the head. A moment later he was grabbing the ropes and when Louis closed in and clipped him a few times to the head he collapsed to the floor.

As Walter Bates tolled the count over him Brown made an effort to rise. Suddenly, he grabbed Bates around the waist and hauled him to the canvas with him just as the ten count was completed.

Louis, who weighed 206 pounds, was as unruffled and unmarked at the end as when he stepped into the ring for what probably was his last fight before he meets Champion Jim Braddock for the title next June in Chicago. Brown, from Washington, D. C., weighed 199½.

Brown Gets New Pose.

Brown showed a new fighting pose in the third. Working from a crouch he placed a hand on either side of his chin and tried to keep his head on Louis' shoulder.

The plan worked, but apparently only because Louis was not ready to shoot a hard blow. There had been nothing to cause any great fears for Brown's safety to this point, but when he came out for the fourth it was as though he was seeing there on the canvas the limp bodies of Baer, Carnera, Levinsky and the other Louis victims.

Louis, who collected $8,826 for his evening's work, was unmarked and unwinded. He has a cold, however, and his managers said he had been ordered by his doctor to take a two-weeks rest.

Brown's share of the purse was $3,310. He took 15 per cent and Louis 40 per cent. The fight drew 13,000 fans who paid $27,000 for seats that ranged downward from a $5.50 top. The net gate was $22,202.

Fight By Rounds.

By the Associated Press.

Round One.

They left their corners slowly and circled about in center of the ring. Both looking for openings. Brown shot a light left which glanced off Louis' chin. They fell into a clinch and were parted by Referee Walter Bates. Louis was doing no leading. He finally shot two quick straight lefts which landed but did no damage. Brown crossed his right to the head lightly. They exchanged simultaneous left jabs and Brown was short with a right. Louis shot a left hook to the body, the first hard blow of the fight but Brown came back with a looping right to the ear. They were sparring cautiously at the bell.

The round was even.

Round Two.

Brown came out fast and met Louis near his corner. Brown connected with a looping right to Louis' ear but there was little steam behind the punch. Louis appeared to be stalking Brown awaiting a chance to deliver a lethal wallop. Brown carried the fight to Louis in a brief flurry of punches in the corner of the ring. Brown circled Louis, who dropped back from a left lead. Brown connected with a left to the body but Louis crossed his left to the chin. There was little power in the punch, however. Brown connected with lefts and rights to the body. Louis backed him against the ropes but Brown fought his way clear. Louis began to connect with short lefts and rights to the chin but Brown weathered the storm well. It was Brown's round.

Round Three.

Round Four.

A hard right sent Brown down in a daze. He pulled Referee Bates down in attempting to regain his feet and Bates rushed over and awarded the fight to Louis on a technical knockout.

Swim Record Broken.

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 17 (A.P.).—Edward L. Parke, captain of the Lawrenceville School swimming team, today bettered the recognized national prep school record for the 100-yard breast stroke in the 25-yard Trenton Central High School pool. Parke was clocked in 1:07 flat, breaking his own mark of 1:07.6. Despite Parke's feat, however, Lawrenceville lost to Trenton High in a dual meet, 39 to 27.

Mrs. Denemark's Higher Cloud Lasts to Win in Hialeah Test

Closing Drive Of Maeriel Is Futile

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 17.—Mrs. Emil Denemark's silks flashed back into the limelight here today after a temporary lapse. The Chicago sportswoman's 4-year-old gelding Higher Cloud, a $12.60 for $2 shot coupled with E. D. Shaffer's Floradora, survived a hair-raising finish to win the featured grade "A" handicap of 7 furlongs by a neck under Charlie Kurtsinger. Dewitt Page's Maeriel was second, a half length in advance of T. B. Martin's Liberal.

Warren Wright's Count Morse, standout favorite in the field of seven and recently second to Snark in the latter's world record breaking performance, was deprived of a fair chance. Irving Anderson had the colt on the inside and waiting for an opening which never came, with the result that the Calumet colorbearer was hopelessly hemmed in on the rail virtually all the way. He finished fifth behind Dusty Dawn.

Higher Cloud finished in 1:22 4-5, the same time as Blind Pig made in the grade "B" handicap. This is one-fifth of a second slower than Sweep Like's track mark. Blind Pig, incidentally, is a Denmark cast-off now owned by F. L. Flanders.

Widener Challenge Cup eligibles in the field were Dusty Dawn, Maeriel, Florodora, Count Arthur and Count Morse. Count Arthur was making his first public appearance since October. Lester Balaski was endeavoring to make a clean sweep of the graded handicaps astride the Mrs. J. D. Hertz, veteran, but the latter apparently needs a race or two.

Dusty Dawn, Liberal and Count Morse showed the way to the stretch. Anderson, instead of taking to the outside, elected to gamble on the inside, but he never could get through. Higher Cloud, improving his position steadily with clear racing room, got to the front inside the sixteenth pole, but just lasted to beat Maeriel, which closed fastest of all.

The grade B handicap was easy for F. L. Flanders' Blind Pig, paying slightly better than 2 to 1. The 4-year-old gelded son of Bull Dog clicked by two lengths under Lester Balaski, who also won the grade C handicap. Our Reigh, a Widener challenge cup nominee making his first start since last fall, headed the fast closing Stocks for the place. Blind Pig disposed of Sir Quest, which was coupled with Chance Ray, in the first half mile. He then moved clear and had no trouble staving off Our Reigh and Stocks in the closing strides. The time was 1:22 4-5, only a fifth of a second slower than Sweep Like's track record.

Warren Wright trotted out a new 2-year-old named Chic Maud in the 3-furlong opening event here today and it seemed as if nearly everyone had a tip on the bay filly. The daughter of Chicle-Maud Muller ran to expectations, taking early command in the field of 15 maidens and speeding along to a length and a half score, handily. The Calumet miss finished in 0:33 3-5 under Irving Anderson and was backed into $7.40 for two favoritism.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HIGHER CLOUD, $12.60, $4.90, $3.70; MAERIEL, $10.90, $5.50; LIBERAL, $3.40.

HIGHER CLOUD broke a bit slow and, well ridden, began to move up around turn on the outside, closed with a rush and just lasted to win. MAERIEL trailed far back in early part, came around field and was a fast-going second. LIBERAL was hustled along all the way and held on well. DUSTY DAWN had plenty of speed and had no mishap.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and a furlong. Purse, $1,000. The Bradenton. For 3-year-olds and upward, nonwinners of two races other than maiden or claiming at any time. Start bad. Won driving; place easily. BRANDON PRINCE, well ridden, closed ground gamely, but had to be driven hard to win. INDIAN HEAD was placed on the outside of the stalls and when the start came he went in air, but moved up fast on the outside, took lead after rounding into backstretch and held on gamely. FLYING BANNER had no excuse. DAYTONIAN ran a good race. COUNT STONE had speed for half a mile, then curled up.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-quarter miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward, nonwinners of three races since purchase 1. Start good. Won driving; place easily. Went to post at 5:30. TELLWHY, showing smart improvement assumed lead early and perfectly rated along, saved ground and stood long drive gamely. TIME TO GO moved up with a determined bid around turn, but faltered in last sixteenth. BE BIG followed pace closely and ran good race.

Santa Anita's Test Won by Case Ace

Mrs. Mar's Great Colt Is Winner at Mile; Pays Only $2.60 Mutuel.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Feb. 17.—In final tune-up races for the $50,000 added Santa Anita Derby Monday, Case Ace, Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' great 3-year-old, rang up a brilliant victory in a 6-furlong event, and W. W. Taylor's Oracle turned back the favored Tedius in a 1-mile race at Santa Anita Park today.

As 15,000 fans plunked $82,944 on the feature sixth race, the second division of the Derby Trial for a $1,500 purse, Sir Oracle won by three-quarters of a length over Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's Tedious, J. J. Flannigan's Cross S. edged out the other favorite, William Dupont's Fairy Hill, for third.

Case Ace, which Trainer Bob McCarvey, of the Milky Way Farm, believes will win the Kentucky Derby as well as the Santa Anita, lived up the expectations in trimming a none too impressive field in the 6-furlong Maywood for a $1,200 purse.

Paying the shortest price of Santa Anita's current meeting, Case Ace's win was worth $2.60, $2.80 and $2.40. Sky Wind, owned by L. W. Kidd, finished second, nearly three lengths back, paying $13.40 and $5.40, and Hondo, third, paid $2.80.

Jockey Al Robertson's Mount, the son of Teddy By Sweetheart, ran the distance in 1:11 3-5.

He went immediately to the front and had a four-length lead coming into the head of the stretch. Sky Wind charged up but hardly threatened.

Jockey Leo Fallon had Tedious third to Sir Oracle and Patty Cake at the half-mile. Fairy Hill made its bid turning for home, trailing Sir Oracle by three lengths, with Tedious and Cross S moving up. Fairy Hill faded in the stretch, and Tedious, despite a mighty drive, was closing in fast on the winner.

Sir Oracle paid $6.60, $3.20 and $2.40; Tedious, $3.20 and $2.80, and Cross S, $3.20.

Gonzaga Staves Off Late Bid of Eastern to Win 25-22 Thriller

Purple Five Leads, 15-7, At Half

Quantrille and Hanley High Scorers; 13 Out of 14 for Victors.

By John R. Vosburgh.

Gonzaga High's zone defense was as bothersome to Eastern High yesterday as a nonparking zone to a busy motorist, and the leaders of the Catholic Prep School League again felled the interhigh champions, 25-22. A happy assemblage looked on in the Gonzaga gym as the Purple passers won their thirteenth victory in 14 starts.

It was Gonzaga's second victory over the kingpins of public school basketball, Eastern having succumbed, 29-26 on its own court a few weeks ago. Coach Orrel Mitchell's manipulators now have an unassailable claim as the District's leading schoolboy team. In 14 games, only Tech has been able to halt the Purple point-getters.

Both Gonzaga and Eastern indulged in some generous foul-committing and the prepsters almost lost the ball game by missing 11 out of 14 free shot attempts. Eastern mised seven out of 13. Twenty-six fouls were committed, 15 by the Northeast squad. Russ Lombardy and Lee Lusby of Eastern were both ejected for four personal fouls apiece.

Eastern succumbed only after a brilliant rally which saw it overcome a 15-7 halftime deficit and convert it into an 18-15 lead of its own. As the first half ended, Gonzaga was throttling Eastern's offensive effectively with its zone barricade and the outlook looked dark indeed for the Lincoln Parkers.

Pile Up the Points.

It was then, however, that the interhigh champs began piling up 11 straight points while holding Gonzaga scoreless. Lee Lusby led the upswing with five of the 11, including the three in a row which started the rally.

Early in the last period, however, Eastern appeared to have shot its bolt and Gonzaga simultaneously began peppering the basket from all angles. O'Brien scored on a follow shot, Tom Hanley added a free throw, and Connolly and Hanley each sank a basket before Clint Quantrille, Eastern center, tossed two free shots to halt the parade at 21-20 with Gonzaga leading.

Hanley and Connolly then scored, the former intercepting an Eastern pass and Connolly tallying on a sleeper. Lombardy and Lusby were out of the game by this time and Eastern's chances were as bright as a moonless night.

The victory bolstered Gonzaga's hopes of winning the title from St. John's, Catholic champs, tomorrow night when they collide in the Catholic University gymnasium. Followers of both Eastern and Gonzaga are discussing possibility of a third game for charity should Eastern win the interhigh title and Gonzaga the Catholic crown.

15th Straight Won By Mount Rainier

Mount Rainier High School won its fifteenth straight schoolboy victory yesterday by trouncing the National Training School five, 24-7, on the Mount's floor.

Using a zone defense to advantage during the first quarter, the Trainers held the Mount's offense on even terms. But behind the clever ball handling of Brown and Shinn coupled with some fine sharpshooting by the same two lads, the District Line school moved to the front in the second period.

Mount Rainier, leading the Prince Georges County Interhigh League, will entertain Laurel High tonight at 8 o'clock. A preliminary game, that will precede the junior league crown, is on tap between the Little Mounts and Laurel.

Smith U. Cagers Beat Howard, 42-19

With "Rock" Mathews, former Dunbar High School star, and Willie Watts, former Armstrong guard, heading a defense which clogged up their opponents' attack, the Johnson C. Smit University quintet, of Charlotte, N. C., last night defeated the Howard University Bisons before a capacity crowd, 42-19.

They led all the way, the count at the half being 27-15, with Bill Bowers and Jack Boulware leading the scoring. Brown was the principal Bison luminary. In the preliminary the Monroe A. C. defeated the Howard Jayvees, 20-18.

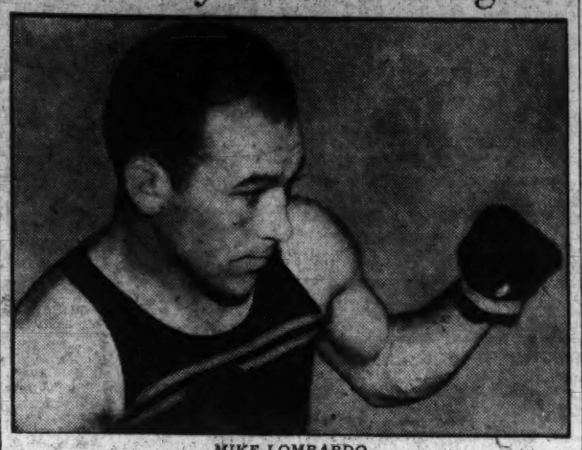
Welters Promise Real Action On Maryland-C. U. Program



MIKE LOMBARDO.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Virtually any bout in the Maryland-Catholic University boxing match Saturday night can be the deciding factor of the duel between these ancient rivals, and the more study given the card the more confused one is in determining which will be the most important.

Take the two welterweight classes for example. Maryland will send Ivan Nedomatsky, 145-pound Southern Conference title-holder, against Fred Mix; and Mike Lombardo, senior welterweight, against Joe Bunsa, star of the Cardinal squad. On the face of it Nedomatsky appears capable of dusting off Mix in jig-time, and Bunsa appears to be equally capable of disposing of Lombardo.

But digging under the surface we find a number of conditions and circumstances that alter the complexion of the matter. Nedomatsky, still a murderous puncher although not as good as when he fought in the lightweight division, undoubtedly will knockout Mix if he catches him, but he may have trouble overtaking the Cardinals' representative.

Nedomatsky will dog him from the first bell to the finish, feinting, maneuvering and trying to make an opening for his Sunday punches. He should locate a landing spot for both gloves, as he is a veritable bulldog in action and a clever boxer. He knows all the tricks and will shoot the works, and on a basis of past performances should win handily.

Lombardo is gunning for Bunsa, and the short, stocky Terrapin ace will be at his best for this scrap. Mike is one of the ruggedest collegiate ringmen in the game, a veritable Titan. He has seldom been off his feet in three years of college fighting and never down for the full count. The formula for flattening him out must include at least two sledge hammers and four sticks of dynamite, and even then he'd probably be only dazed.

Bunsa, however, will give him the severest test of his career, for the Catholic U. rookie carries a varied assortment of damaging weapons. Bunsa hits harder than Lombardo and punches with authority. His record for the season shows three knockouts in four fights, including among his victims Wilton Mann, of Duke. Harrison, of Army, holds the lone decision over him, and it was of the questionable variety.

Bunsa will stand toe-to-toe with Lombardo and slug it out if that's what Mike wants, and Lombardo would like nothing better, or he'll box with him and trade jab for jab, trick for trick. In short he'll match Lombardo in every respect and very likely defeat him, but it's going to be one helluva fight.

Favorites Win In Golf Titlists' Tourney

By the United Press.

St. Augustine, Fla., Feb. 17.—Led by defending champion Claude Harmon, of Orlando, Fla., favorites fought their way into the quarter-finals of the national tournament of golf club champions over the sunbathed St. Augustine course today.

Ward Beats Switzer.

The 20-year-old Harmon had to equal par over 18 holes to dispose of Frank Allan, of Pittston, Pa., 2 up at the turn, Harmon stood off Allan's rally which cut his lead to two holes and finally closed out the Pennsylvania star on the final green.

Ward, who yesterday eliminate Carl Dann, jr., of Orlando, the comedalist, today blasted Joe Switzer, of St. Louis, Notre Dame golf captain, out of the tourney, Ward won, 2 and 1, after leading 4 and 1 at the turn.

The powerful drives and tricky putting of Charles G. Eberhardt, of Chautauqua, N. Y., stumped Whitehead during the first nine today, but the New Jersey titleholder outsteadied the New Yorker. Eberhardt held Whitehead even until he lost his touch on the fourteenth, when the blond bomber hit his stride and came on to win, 2 and 1.

Schmarr Seeks Scoring Mark Tonight

Husky Hermie Schmarr, high-scoring Catholic University forward and leader of the District individual scoring race at this writing, will be gunning for a new personal record tonight when the Cardinals engage La Salle, of Philadelphia, at Brookland. The tap-off is scheduled for 8 o'clock.

This game shares interest with the Maryland-Washington and Lee Southern Conference debate over in neighboring College Park, which starts at 8 o'clock. The only other game involving a local team will be played at Pittsburgh where Wilson Teachers are scheduled to meet Duquesne.

Schmarr, an easy-going Dutchman with an unerring aim, comes up to tonight's contest with 197 points to his credit, 1 less than his total of a year ago. Eighty field goals and 37 successful four tries went into the making of that total. One field goal will give him a new record, and it is safe to say he'll get it.

Near Record.

With four games left to play, Hermie is in a fair position to hang up an all-time District scoring record, after consistently improving since his sophomore year. He scored 181 points as a rookie, and bettered that total last year with 61 field goals and 34 fouls.

Against Long Island Tuesday night at New York, he tossed in 11 field goals, and the night before had added to his pyramiding total with 7 against John Marshall. But for the fact that he was ousted from the latter game after seven minutes of play because four personal fouls, what he might have done in a full game is only conjecture. Long Island is reported to have used substitutes in the last half of its game with the Cards when Schmarr tallied 10 goals, but the truth of the matter is that the reserves did not enter the game until the last five minutes.

Maryland Underdog.

Schmarr is recognized as one of the greatest courtmen developed at a local school in years. Big and strong, able to stand the terrific physical strain, he not only is an excellent shot but an outstanding floorman.

Maryland will be the underdog against Washington and Lee, having absorbed a 51-27 pasting from the Generals in their first meeting.

The Terps, however, are fighting for a berth in the annual conference tournament and need another victory to clinch matters, an incentive that means something.

The Virginians feature Bob Spessard, 6-foot, 7-inch center, who is accustomed to making at least 20 points a game. Spessard is rated one of the East's best courtmen. Another featured performer is Bill Borries, 6-foot, 4-inch forward, and brother of Navy's immortal "Buzz" Borries. Both men will bear watching.

$49 Meal, Dogs Looked Alike, Says He Who Took Wrong One

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17.—A $49 lunch made Everiste Girouard so giddy, he testified today, that he was unable to tell a hairless Chihuahua from a long-haired Pomeranian.

Girouard, who exhibited a Chihuahua at the recent Westminster Kennel Club Show, was explaining to Magistrate Thomas A. Aurelio how he happened to start out of Madison Square Garden with somebody else's Pomeranian under his coat.

To his almost unbelievable joy, he said, his own dog won a third-prize ribbon and $3 in cash. So he and a woman friend promptly went out and had the $49 lunch, which was mostly alcoholic, he continued.

And when he returned he said he must have got in the wrong alley and picked up the Pomeranian by mistake. He was arrested leaving the garden on complaint of Walter A. Freeth, owner of the Pomeranian.

Magistrate Aurelio held him for grand jury action on a charge of grand larceny. Freeth said his dog was worth $150, or a little less than $50 a pound.

Columbus Ties Citadel Ring Team, 4-4

Returning their opponents' fire in true military spirit, a squadron of fighting cadets from The Citadel last night held Columbus University's ringmen to a 4-4 draw in an interesting match at Turner's Arena. Some 1,200 fans saw the bouts.

A forfeit in the heavyweight division proved to be the host team's undoing, for it outfought the Charleston lads by a 4-3 margin in actual competition. Nor did a close decision against Ray Morse in the bantamweight class help matters. The Citatdel, however, had a rugged, aggressive team, and it asked no favors of the judges.

Two knockouts featured the performance, both credited to Columbus. Jimmy Willis, the lanky featherweight, was awarded a technical knockout over "Skeet" Melfi after two rounds of fisticuffing, in which Willis led all the way. Buddy Lazear, Columbus' junior welterweight, scored a clean knockout over "Ripper" Todd, pounding him to the canvas with a series of lefts to the stomach after 1:20 of the first round.

Schlaifer Wins Battle.

Dave Schlaifer had all the competition he could handle in Carlos Townsend, Citadel middleweight, who rocked the District lad with a couple of hard rights to the head in the first round and was dangerous over the rest of the distance. Schlaifer, however, dropped his man with a hard right in the second round, and this proved to be the turning point of the battle.

Morse and Johnny Hughes staged one of the evening's fastest and hardest fights, frequently standing toe-to-toe and slugging for all they were worth. Both scored repeatedly with hard rights to the head, and both appeared on the verge of winning by a knockout at various stages of the bout.

Willis raised a huge lump over Melfi's right eye by his steady right-hand punching throughout the first two rounds, and was a couple of city blocks ahead of the visitor when a halt was called. Willis had a big advantage in height and reach and used them to the best advantage.

Pete Lempesis, 155-pounder, and Buddy Rogers, 175-pounder, clinched the draw for their team, besting Bobby Rawson and Bob Grimm, respectively. Both were slow bouts, and the local fighters were decisively outpointed in each instance.

Rosslyn Girls Win, Approach Pin Crown

Galt Davis' champion Rosslyn lassies moved closer to another pennant in the Ladies District League last night, taking in stride a two-game victory over the R. E. A. Cleaners. The champions, rolling in their usual fine form, pounded the maples for a 588 game and a total pinfall of 1,658.

Lucky Strike's bid for the runner-up position was an odd-game decision over Arcadia, aided by Capt. Lorraine Gulli's 151 game and 374 set. Other results were Convention Hall's two wins over Swanee and Temple's 2-1 defeat of Georgetown. The scheduled match between Highway Engineering and National Beer, which had a bearing on second place, was postponed.

A barrage of heavy pin-shooting featured the activities in the Commercial League at Convention Hall. Russell Kilby, of the Evening Star, annexed the individual spotlight with a big game of 161 and Charles Groff, Daily News, gained high set honors with 397. The Diamond Cab pinmen came through with a brilliant team game of 646 and high total pinfall went to Daily News with 1762.

Maud Fuschine, secretary of the Lucky Strike Ladies League, accounted for both of Social Security's two victories over Buforcom, marking twice in the final box of each game . . . General Land Office increased its lead in swamping Holmes Bakery . . . Shooting a season record set of 1604, the Cream Tops blanked Accounting in the Chestnut Farms Dairy League . . . With Roy Sha carrying the brunt of the attack, Connecticut chalked up new game and set marks in the Optical League, rolling 595 and 1,615, respectively . . . Jim Bridges, of Riggs Bank, collected a 152 game for the best individual effort in the Bankers League . . . Pete Cocuzzi rolled a 406 set which enabled Lido to establish two new marks in the Civic Club League, a 613 game and 1,749 set.

Carnegie Tech Will Be Choice Over Hoyas

Georgetown's ambitious courtmen resume their almost hopeless quest for the Eastern Conference championship tomorrow night at Tech High School, meeting Carnegie Tech at 8:30 o'clock.

The Hoyas have been strengthened by the return of Carroll Shore, ace forward, who was injured in the Yale game last week, and was thought to be out for the season. Diagnosed as a broken leg in a precursory examination, the injury proved to be an old ankle ailment which was aggravated by a sharp twist. Shore has been working out daily, although not scrimmaging, and will be ready for action.

Tech won the conference championship last year, breaking Pittsburgh's reign, which had extended back to the initial season. The two tied in the regulation number of games with seven victories and three losses, and Carnegie won the play-off, 32-27.

Four of the five men who won the pennant are back with the club, as Capt. Joe McCalka was the only loss suffered through graduation. Co-Captains "Hoot" Gibson and Si Felser, Hugh James, 6-foot 7-inch center are the hold-overs.

Carnegie employs the zone defense, and used it so effectively in the first game with Georgetown, the Hoyas made only two points in the first half and 17 throughout the entire game. Since then, however, Mesmer's men have had a variety of experiences against this type of defense, and have done quite well. Syracuse tried it, but was forced to revert to a man-for-man style when Georgetown rolled up a huge lead in the first few minutes of their recent game.

Patty Berg, Helen Dettweiler Advance in Florida Tourney

By the Associated Press.

Palm Beach, Fla., Feb. 17.—Patty Berg, freckled favorite from Minneapolis, eliminated Jean Bauer, of Providence, from the annual Women's Golf tournament today with the loss of only three holes. Patty won six and four.

With Kathryn Hemphill, the Carolina champion, a victim of the first round, Patty found Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., the next obstacle between her and another silver loving cup. Miss Miley advanced to a semi-final meeting with the Minnesota schoolgirl tomorrow by eliminating Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco, 4 and 3.

In the other bracket Audrey Phipps, of Palm Beach, defeated Mrs. Freeda Nolan, of Newcastle, Pa., eight and seven, and Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, eliminated Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., three and two, the closest match of the day.

Miss Dettweiler 2-putted the first green, to win with a 4. The second was halved and the Washington girl lost the third when her second shot was trapped. Miss Cochran dropped the fourth when Helen recorded a par 3.

Miss Dettweiler was out of bounds on the fifth and won the sixth with another par. The seventh was halved and Miss Cochrane won the eighth when the Washington lass wound up behind a stymie. Miss Detweiler won the ninth to go into theturn 1 up.

Miss Cochran won the twelfth and fourteenth, but the Washington miss ended the match by capturing the sixteenth. The District girl will meet Audrey Phipps in the semi-final round tomorrow.

Miss Bauer played better golf than two weeks ago when she bowed to Miss Berg ten and nine in the final of the Miami Biltmore tournament at Coral Gables but she still was no match for the redhead.

Jean three-putted to lose the first and Patty won the next three with one-putt greens. Miss Bauer lost the fifth straight when her tee shot went into the woods, but took the next when Patty's drive was out of bounds. Patty laid a stymie to even the eighth, but dropped the next one when she clipped past the green and missed a put.

Miss Berg took the twelfth when Jean lost her ball in the bank of a water hazard and took five. Miss Bauer kept the match alive with a birdie four on the thirteenth, where Patty three-putted, but yielded the deciding hole to a birdie after topping her second shot and chipping short of the elevated green.

Coming Battle for 130-Pound Title Vies With Unlimited Class for Cage Play Interest

Along with the coming scramble for the A. A. U. unlimited crown held by the George Washington Freshmen, the struggles in the other classes are also generating keen interest.

Especially conspicuous is the 130-pound class outlook in which a score of teams are planning to gun for the title now held by Northeast Boys Club when the city-wide tourney sponsored by The Post opens March 1 at the Heurich gymnasium.

Northeast, to say the least, is decidedly on the spot and a small army of teams consider themselves the team to beat. Particularly confident is the Boys Club of Washington Fleetwing five, which is seeking to set a city record of three A. A. U. titles. No team has won more than two A. A. U. championships in a row and so far as the Fleetwings can find out, Sholl's Cafe is the only other team that ever won two in a row.

Under the guidance of Charlie Reynolds, major domo of the Washington Boys Club, the present Fleetwings started playing in the 85-pound class and have been making a big name for themselves ever since. They originally started out as the Boys Club Americans. In the 85-pound class they were plenty good, but in the 100-pound class they were a lot better.

Two years ago the cagy Mr. Reynolds entered his pupils in the A. A. U. 100-pound class event and then watched them race off with the title. Flashing the sphere for the Americans were Johnny Poston, Melvin Shewbridge, Sam Gendelman, Joe Connolly, Sid Schulman and Carroll Hall.

These half-dozen youngsters are now playing their fourth year together. Not content with winning one championship, they decided to enter the 115-pound class last year and won the championship. This year they consider themselves good enough for promotion to the 130-pound division and are anxious to add the title in that class to their collection.

Mindful of the tough opposition to be faced, they have added four new men to the squad, Joe Zanelotti, Pete Marshall, Harold Gooding and Cecil Darden. In Zanelotti the Fleetwings gained the leading scorer of the Boys Club League of the city.

The Fleetwings already hold one Post trophy. They entered the Police Boys Club city tournament in the 130-pound class in December and made off with the Post cup by turning back the defending champions, Northeast Boys Club in the final.

Meanwhile, the 145-pound class has been producing considerable basketball gossip with some observers claiming Northeast Boys Club is the team to beat although Merrick Boys Club, Bovello Plumbers and numerous other combinations are of a different opinion.

Entry blanks are available at the Post Sports Department, Boys Club of Washington, Northeast Boys Club, Police Boys Clubs and the Heurich Gymnasium. All entries must be filed at the Washington Boys Club by midnight February 24.

5 Stars to Vie In New York 500 Meters

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17.—The field of five for the Buermeyer 500 at the New York A. C. indoor track and field meet in Madison Square Garden Saturday night has been completed with the entry of Richard Gill, of Boston College.

The red-headed New England 440-yard champion, will run against two Buermeyer winners, Eddie O'Brien, winner last year, and John Hoffstetters, 1935 winner; Al Fitch, of the Los Angeles A. C., anchor man and holder of the world indoor 500-yard mark of 57.8 seconds, on the 1936 Olympic 1,600-meter relay team, and the sensational Jim Herbert, unbeaten in the Columbus 500, Prout 600, Millrose 600 and Hollis 600.

Oscar Sutermeister, who, although six years out of college, vaulted into the 14-foot class for the first time in his career last Saturday, will compete in the New York A. C. pole vault against Sueo Oke, the Japanese star; Earle Meadows, Olympic champion, and six others.

Three Canadian Olympians will compete in the A. A. U. championships in the Garden February 27. They are Larry O'Conner, sixth-place hurdle winner at Berlin; Sammy Richardson, the present American indoor broad jump title-holder, and Albert Conway, Olympic 800-meter runner. Another Canadian, Arthur Clarke, who placed third to Cunningham and Venzke at Boston last Saturday, also will run.

N.Y. Exchanges Restrict Free Ride Traders

Records Will Be Required on Margin Accounts for Daily Deals.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 17.—Meeting the wishes of the Federal Reserve Board, the New York Stock Exchange and the Curb Exchange today cracked down on members who have been allowing customers a "free ride" in their margin dealings.

Under a new rule adopted by the governing committee members and registered firms carrying margin accounts for customers are required to make daily records of initial or additional margins correlated to the transactions of the day, and to show for each account the amount of margin required and the time and manner in which it is obtained.

The move by the exchange followed an announcement in Washington by the Federal Reserve Board that the exchange had been permitted to work out its own remedy.

The exchange action, officials said, was designed to discourage practices by which traders were able to take advantage of the three-day margin rule or otherwise evade margin requirements through switching of securities in their accounts.

The three-day rule, permissible under Regulation T, as devised by the Federal Reserve Board, was intended to apply to special cases, but complaint had been made that it had been abused by certain brokers. By the steps taken today the exchange will seek to have margins posted promptly, and to permit the three-day delay only in exceptional cases.

Steel Demand Lifts Output To New Peak

Ingot Production Rises to 82½ Per Cent of Capacity.

New York, Feb. 17 (AP).—Expanding demand for steel has brought new business in excess of shipments and forced a further extension of deliveries on many products, "iron age" said today in the weekly review of the industry. Ingot production was estimated at 82½ per cent of capacity, 1½ points over last week.

"Lifting of suspensions on General Motors orders," the Trade Journal said, "flood rehabilitation projects and replenishment of damaged stocks of jobbers and consumers, renewed buying on a large scale from the Pacific Coast following settlement of the maritime strike, and an increase in export orders are outstanding factors in the increased pressure on steel mills.

"Pacific Coast jobbers and consumers are again taking water shipments in good volume, but the most striking item of business is the placing of about 30,000 tons of structural steel for a Federal post-office and jail and an adjoining railroad station at Los Angeles. An Eastern steel company has put on an additional open-hearth furnace to take care of Pacific Coast orders.

"Railroads are using more steel than they have in six or seven years. New freight cars placed since December 1 call for 360,000 tons.

The Market

Stock Tone Improves in Rail and Motor List in More Active Trading; Bonds Firm.

New York, Feb. 17.—Stocks improved a little in moderately active trading. Turnover was around 2,500,000 shares. Government bonds also looked a bit firmer and dollars recovered. May wheat rose an eighth of a cent to 135⅝ cents a bushel.

Mid-week trade news favored the bull position in stocks. Reviewing steel, the Iron Age told of increasing demand and of a rise in the scrap market, an event which usually means increasing use of steel. Railroads, building construction and motors are using more steel, Railroad freight traffic last week increased over the preceding week and a year ago, and electrical output topped the high level of the corresponding period of 1936.

Steel shares were steady but failed to resume their role as pace setters. Most buoyancy was shown among the rails, coppers and low-priced motor shares. Gains in the rail list ranged from 1 to 2 points, with the receivership crowd, partly because of their low prices, again proving to be the most popular. In better grades, New York Central was the leader.

At their best prices the coppers were a point higher. Demand increased for American Zinc, one of the recent spectacular performers in the low-priced sector. International Nickel was stronger than usual. Motors were best in the small issues. Studebaker mounted rapidly to a new high price around 20. Reo also was lifted and Hudson saw a new peak. Chrysler moved ahead, but General Motors was rather quiet. In the early dealings Reo figured in a block of 20,000 shares.

Standard Oil Higher.

Oil shares were mixed. Standard slowly forged ahead and Pure Oil hardened. Miscellaneous strong boys were International Telephone, American & Foreign Power, Standard Gas, R.-K.-O., Montgomery Ward, Colgate, Douglas. Profit taking held down Yellow Truck. Lehigh Coal softened, as did Woolworth.

The Administration high-spending dentists habitually have tried to comfort the American patient by telling him that it won't hurt half as much as it does his British cousin; that his per capita debt is only half as large, or something of that sort. Even some of the easy money and large debt exponents in Great Britain are at last becoming a bit worried over the outlook. The cheap money policy is beginning to cause anxiety lest in the end confidence in the pound sterling weakens, provided no return to a gold standard takes place.

For all the enormous debt total and high taxation, a fresh drive for larger debt, higher taxes and inflation is about to begin. A $7,500,000,000 rearmament program is announced. The news was greeted by a sharp drop in British government obligations, which shows that in time other influences than cheap money can operate. We may yet find that out. So far our Government bond market has been one largely of interest rates and slide rules, but, as President Roosevelt so ably said in his first campaign speeches, a chronic deficit destroys Government credit.

The British program may drive more "hot money" this way, but without floating foreign capital the forces of inflation at work here are increasing in strength. At the same time the market for new bond and note issues is weakening a bit. Underwriters recently have had to lower their pegs on unsold issues, and a lull for a while in new offerings is anticipated, until after the effects of higher reserve requirements can be learned. It did not pass notice that a high Government official, asking Congress for extension of time in which to substitute bond collateral for gold under currency notes, held up to the view the likelihood of that terror, deflation, in case that provision were dropped. Congressmen may yet remind the Administration of deflationary effects of proposed credit control strategy.

Optimism Rising.

The proposal of the superintendent of insurance to lower the standards of life insurance investment it understandable, but it is also a sign of our optimistic times. He would soften the five-year earnings provision, so as to enable companies that made a poor showing in the worst of the depression, but which are now on their feet, to qualify under the investment act. The superintendent probably is right in saying that investments in many such companies are sound enough (at this time), but the law was made in the first place to protect the insurance company funds in times of stress. Some diehards would argue that the mere fact of difficulty in securing sufficient securities that qualify as gilt-edged should not be used to take down any bars. In that respect, and also in regard to railroad receiverships, the recent unpleasant experience ought to have given the country a good lesson on what can happen. Its general line of investment conduct previously had been along the line of what was probable. That is the same principle as followed by the Western farmer and the dweller in earthquake and flood zones.

Operations of the Baldwin Locomotive Works and subsidiary companies including the Midvale Co., for 1936, resulted a profit of $447,194, before provision for depreciation and interest, as compared with $499,416 in 1935, according to the annual report made public today by George H. Houston, president. After all charges the consolidated net less for the year 1936 amounted to $2,163,949 as compared with a consolidated net loss of $2,119,738 reported for 1935.

Lima Locomotive.

A profit of more than $1,000,000 was credited today to the Lima Locomotive Works, Inc., Lima, Ohio, from the sale of 41,400 shares of its common stock acquired at low prices in the open market during the depression. In the red the last few years from operations, the locomotive company's annual report showed a profit in 1936 of $488,211 from the sale of 12,200 shares at an average price of $60 compared with an average cost of about $20. From operations there was a loss of $251,104 last year against a loss of $538,707 in 1935, the company reported.

Dividends.

Directors of Kennecott Copper Corporation today declared a dividend of 50 cents a share on the capital stock, payable March 31 to holders of record March 5. Directors of Humble Oil & Refining Co. today placed the common stock on a $1.50 annual basis with the declaration of a quarterly payment of 37½ cents a share. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. today declared the usual quarterly dividend of $2.25 on capital stock, which calls for distribution of about $42,000,000 among 675,000 shareholders. The dividend is payable April 15 to stock of record March 15.

Bay State Unit Urged to Ratify U.S. Child Act

Union Delegates Advocate Passing of Amendment at Group Hearing.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Feb. 17.—Representatives of President Roosevelt and of organized labor joined today in urging before a legislative committee that Massachusetts ratify the Federal child labor amendment.

Against these forces President Emeritus A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard University and a spokesman for William Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, raised objection that the amendment would give Congress power to control the education and home life of children.

To this argument Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, declared:

"The amendment gives to Congress power to 'limit, regulate and prohibit' the labor of children under 18. It has nothing to do with education. Let that be clear. If it was intended that Congress by this amendment could affect the education of children in any way it would have said so."

Phraseology Assailed.

But another speaker for the amendment, J. Raymond Walsh, New England vice president of the American Federation of Teachers and a member of the Harvard University faculty, answering a question from a member of the committee, said he thought that as now phrased the amendment would permit Congress to prohibit "teaching to persons under 18 years of age."

McGrady pointed out that 27 States already have ratified the amendment and predicted that within two years the nine more necessary to put the amendment in effect would ratify.

The issue, he said, was "to regulate and prohibit the trade of children's bodies in industry."

Both President Lowell and the cardinal's spokesman, Mgr. Michael J. Ahern, expressed their opposition to child labor, but took exception to the form of the amendment, Mgr. Ahern asserting:

Too Much Power Seen.

"With all my heart and soul I excoriate and condemn labor that is harmful to children and destructive of their rights and the rights of others."

Dr. Lowell, stooped and white-haired, warned "if you don't want power exercised don't give it." He contended the sponsors of the amendment sought to "regulate the life of children."

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, Feb. 17.—The stock market closed with a heavy tone as selling became general due to the nervousness of traders resulting from the government's new defense program. Armament shares were active and strong while the remainder of the list eased from their high prices for the day. German bonds continued firm at higher prices and transatlantic issues remained steady. Gilt-edged securities were in supply at lower quotations. Oil and mining stocks were active and strong early but also reacted.

Paris.—Prices movements were mixed in the bourse, industrials shares selling lower while the railroad group advanced. Rentes were exceptionally strong, net gains being 130 to 145 centimes. Bank of France also moved 225 francs higher.

Liverpool.—Wheat futures after advancing almost two pence on German buying of Argentine, Australian and Indian wheat and Far East purchases of Australian grain, reacted partially on realizing and closed ½d to ¾d higher. Early liquidation in cotton futures attracted scale down buying and covering, which resulted in a partial recovery with the market closing unchanged to 3 points lower.

Plan of Taxing Foreign Capital Yet Incomplete

U. S. Aides Preparing Data Confer Again With Roosevelt.

Further exploration of ways and means to curb the inflow of foreign capital, which has now amounted to nearly $8,000,000,000 of foreign holdings in this country, continued yesterday at the White House.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., told reporters on his emergence from an hour-and-a-half conference with the President that the suggested legislation "is still in the study stage."

Morgenthau, Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System; James M. Landis, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and Herman Oliphant, general counsel of the Treasury, were present at the conference.

The disposition of new and drastic taxes on withdrawals of foreign capital and on securities transactions made by foreigners are possibilities being studied. In some quarters yesterday it was believed the Administration is endeavoring to fix the exact point at which taxation will be stringent, but will not cause immediate withdrawals of foreign holdings on too large a scale.

Such withdrawals might have serious effects on the country's exchanges, although the present reserve "cushion," according to Chairman Eccles, is ample to tide over any short-term outflow. Treasury officials, it is understood, would secretly welcome such a wave of outgoing gold, which has served as a wide base for inflation, causing Reserve System officials to jam brakes on the Nation's credit base.

Announcement of the final proposals had been expected in the very near future, possibly on Friday of this week, but latest guessers set the date ahead until the middle of next week.

CCC Youth's Love Note May Cost U. S. $1,000

By the Associated Press.

The act of a Civilian Conservation Corps youth in writing a love note and tossing it from a truck to a group of girls on a highway may cost the Government $1,000.

The House Claims Committee approved yesterday a bill for payment of that amount to Venice La Prad, 8, of Salem, Va. She dashed out into the road to pick up the note, which was intended for someone else, and was struck by a second CCC truck.

Securities Filing Passes 5 Billion

Securities registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission in 1936 totaled in estimated gross proceeds $5,064,737,000, it was revealed yesterday.

This amount is almost twice as large as the 1935 figure of $2,677,693,000, and almost eight times the 1934 volume of $640,573,000.

The commission's report showed a five-fold gain in 1936 over 1935 in the amount of money proposed by the Nation's corporations for use, as working capital and plant and equipment from the sale of such securities.

Manufacturers were the largest registrants, with a total of $1,557,795,000 in securities, nearly a third of the total registrations. These were largely composed of iron and steel and oil-refining industries. Utilities accounted for $1,506,429,000, or 29.7 per cent of the total, a drop from 39.1 per cent of the total in 1935. Financial and investment companies were third, with $816,252,000, or 16.1 per cent of all securities effectively registered.

Treaty Change Between U. S., Egypt Planned

Other Nations Accept Bid to Discuss Revision of 'Extra' Rights.

By the Associated Press.

The United States agreed yesterday to consider proposed alterations in a century-old treaty by which it has enjoyed extra-territoriality rights in Egypt since 1830.

Bert Fish, Minister to Egypt, presented to that government the United States Governments' acceptance of an invitation to participate with Egypt and other powers in a conference on the question at Montreux, Switzerland, beginning on April 12.

The action is Egypt's first step toward the abolition of "capitulations," as extra-territoriality is known in the Near East. It is calculated to complete tentative re-establishment of Egyptian independence under the recent Anglo-Egyptian treaty.

Twelve nations besides the United States also have extra-territoriality rights.

No American citizen can be taxed by Egypt without the consent of the United States Government. None may be tried for civil or criminal offenses except by American consular representatives or by "mixed" courts on which the United States Government is represented.

Information reaching here says Egypt wishes to terminate outright the financial "capitulations," thus obtaining freedom of action in taxation of foreigners.

House Passes Bill to Extend Pension Rules

3,000 Legislative Workers Affected If Measure Becomes Law.

For the second time the House yesterday passed a bill to extend the retirement benefits now enjoyed by civil service employes to the legislative employes on Capitol Hill. A similar measure was adopted by the House last year, but rejected in the Senate.

The House also passed a bill to amend the civil service law relating to residence requirements of applicants for examinations before the Civil Service Commission. The bill has been reported favorably by the Senate Civil Service Committee.

The effect of the retirement bill, if it becomes a law, will be to extend the retirement pension benefits to all legislative employes who pay up their back annuities. It does not place them under civil service, nor is it mandatory.

Only 12 Are Eligible.

Actually only a dozen legislative employes have worked long enough in the service to be eligible for retirement now, Representative Sirovich (Democrat), of New York, told the House. They have made a career of Congressional secretarial service and have records of from 35 to 40 years, he said.

Some 3,000 other legislative employes may take advantage of the retirement benefits on the same basis as civil service workers if the bill becomes a law. However, because of the impermency of many of the positions, it is doubtful whether the majority will take advantage of the privilege.

An outstanding example of what now happens to legislative employes who make a career of the work occured at the beginning of the present session when the Republican caucus ousted Bert W. Kennedy, a minority employe in the House chamber, who had served the House 40 odd years. Had the retirement privilege been effective, he would have been eligible for a pension.

One section of the bill prevents legislative employes from being automatically retired when they reach the retirement age. It provides that they may continue subject to the wishes of any Senator, Representative, or other official of the legislative branch.

Chairman Ramspeck, of the House Civil Service Commission, pointed out that the bill seeks to bring the legislative employes under the terms of the retirement act in the same manner as employes of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Legislative employes must give notice in writing within six months of the enactment of the bill to the Clerk of the House or Secretary of the Senate of their desire to come within the provisions of the act.

Amends Residence Law.

The bill amending the law relative to the residence requirement of applicants before the Civil Service Commission provides that the commission shall accept as sufficient evidence of residence a certificate of an officer of the county or State of which the applicant is a citizen stating that he had been a resident for not less than 1 year preceding the application.

The measure, which passed the Senate last year, also seeks to reinstate the 1-year residence requirement, which was inadvertently repealed by Congress in an act passed for another purpose. The requirement of this statute is that bona-fide residence for only 6 months be shown.

Social Security Law Held Valid

New Orleans, Feb. 17 (AP).—The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals today upheld the constitutionality of the social security act.

The opinion affirmed the judgment by United States District Judge David J. Davis in Birmingham, Ala.

The Beeland Wholesale Co. of Greenville, Ala., and some 200 other Alabama concerns sought in the Alabama court to restrain collection of any taxes under the social security act and also asked that three titles of the act be held unconstitutional.

The court said a decree with respect to Federal taxes is expressly expected from the jurisdiction to make declaratory judgments.

The remedy by injunction is equally unavailing, the opinion held, under Federal statutes "which prohibits suit in any court for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax."

Labor Solicitor Quits.

Charles O. Gregory, solicitor of the Labor Department, resigned yesterday effective March 1, and the resignation was accepted by President Roosevelt. No successor has been chosen.

Another Pensioner Started on 'Spree'

Chelan, Wash., Feb. 17 (AP).—Chelan's Townsend plan chief, announcing a month-old "pension experiment" had built up a $400 transaction tax "kitty," launched another oldster on the path of temporary riches last night and declared:

"The Townsend plan is not being tested—it has been proved to be good."

Merchants who participated in the "velocity dollar" ventures professed surprise over the amount of gains claimed by Isom Lamb, backer of the test, but conceded they had received "a lot of good advertising."

Lamb explained he had withheld 90 per cent of the "honor tax" money to redeem the $200 in checks given to Mrs. Freeman and the script to be given Mrs. Anne Pilsen, 69, the new pensioner. He said this reserve exceeded $400.

Metcalfe to Get High Medical Post With Army

Col. Raymond F. Metcalfe yesterday was nominated by President Roosevelt to be Assistant Surgeon General of the Army with the rank of brigadier general. The nomination, made on the recommendation of Secretary of War Woodring, was sent to the Senate for approval.

Col. Metcalfe, now chief of the surgical service at Walter Reed Hospital, will take office March 1, succeeding Brig. Gen. M. A. W. Shockley, retiring after more than 30 years' service in the Army.

Receiving his medical degree from the University of Buffalo in 1900, Col. Metcalfe was appointed assistant surgeon in the Army in 1901. Following graduation from the Army Medical School here he served in the Philippines, helping to wipe out a cholera epidemic in the island of Leyte. Other pre-war assignments included duty at other Philippine posts, at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and Columbus Barracks, Ohio.

During the World War he was ordered to France with the A. E. F. as surgeon, Thirty-sixth Division, participating in the Oise-Aisne and Meuse-Argonne operations. He also served as surgeon, First Army Corps, A. E. F. For his services during serious epidemics of Spanish influenza, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal.

Following the war he was on duty in Washington as attending surgeon and later assistant to the attending surgeon. From 1920 to 1927 he was Chief of Surgical Service, Station Hospital, Fort Sam Houston, Tex. Following duty commanding the Tripler General Hospital, Honolulu, he served until 1935 as Chief of Surgical Service, Letterman General Hospital, San Francisco.

He was promoted to captain in the Medical Corps in 1906, and to lieutenant colonel in 1917. Advanced to the temporary rank of colonel in 1918, he was commissioned colonel in the Regular Army in 1927.

Miss Earhart, Husband Arrive in Cleveland

George Palmer Putnam, her husband, who accompanied her, termed the trip a "leisurely flight" and said the plane's flying time was 2 hours and 30 minutes. "We loafed along as Miss Earhart tested newly installed instruments," he said. "Everything functioned satisfactorily." The aviatrix plans a globe-circling flight in the Laboratory next month.

Injured Huntsman Guarded for Weeks By 6 Starving Dogs

Santa Maria, Calif., Feb. 17 (AP).—Six dogs were starving.

"But I just told them: 'Boys, the old man needs all this chow till he gets well.' And they never touched a speck. And I'd have died, for sure, if those dogs had ever left me."

That was the story told today by Charles Tant, hunter of mountain lions, who lay injured since early in January in a cave in the wild Los Padres Forest. He dragged himself back to civilization yesterday.

Six weeks ago, Tant said, he slipped on ice while hunting, smashing a knee-cap and elbow. The first of many blizzards was starting. Inch by inch, he said, he crawled to a cave where he had cached food. The dogs went with him. He stayed there until several days ago.

"Early this week, I says to myself, 'when this chow is gone, I got to do something.' And I did."

It was 65 miles to the nearest habitation. Half-hobbling, cold and in pain, he made his way through the forest to the cabin of Dot Webber. Forest rangers brought him to surgical aid.

Three Grave Murderers Killed by Firing Squad

Reggio di Calabria, Italy, Feb. 17 (AP).—Three men, sentenced to death for the "three graves murders," were shot today by a firing squad at the edge of the cemetery here.

The trio, Antonio de Stefano, Francesco Mandalari and Domenico Artuso, were convicted last August of murdering Maria Ferrante and Amedeo Recupero and of attempting to kill Antonio Ferrante, all for money. The slayers prepared graves in advnce for their victims.
